FADE IN:

1 MAIN TITLES BEGIN

Writhing pools of light and dark, out of which emerge images from "The Bride of Frankenstein," directed by James Whale. Elsa Lanchester, as the Monster's Bride, looks up, down, left, right, startled to be alive. The Monster stares at her. "Friend?" he asks, tenderly, desperately.

2 EXT. COUNTRYSIDE - NIGHT (B & W)

Lightning splits the black-and-white sky, revealing a single shattered oak in a desolate landscape. Below, a HUMAN SILHOUETTE stumbles through the darkness, the top of his head flat, his arms long and heavy, his boots weighted with mud.

Suddenly the storm fades. Light creeps into the scene, and color, as we DISSOLVE TO:

3 THE PACIFIC OCEAN

melting into a hazy morning sky. In a box canyon off the coast highway, we see row after neat row of trailer homes, a makeshift village for beach bums.

4 INT. TRAILER - DAY

CLAYTON BOONE opens his eyes. He is 26, handsome in a rough-hewn, Chet Baker-like way, with broad shoulders and a flattop haircut. He grabs a crumpled pack of Lucky Strikes, lights a bent cigarette.

Clay stands and walks bare-assed across the single tin room, his head almost touching the ceiling.

4A EXT. TRAILER PARK - DAY

Clay goes a few rounds with a weatherstained speed bag that's set up behind his trailer.

4B INT. TRAILER - DAY

Clay towels off, glances at the morning paper. He moves aside a pile of paperbacks on a card table until he finds a calendar. His finger targets today's first appointment. "10 A.M. - 788 Amalfi Drive."

5 EXT. TRAILER PARK - DAY

Clay steps out of the trailer, clean-shaven and dressed in dungarees, a T-shirt with a fresh pack of cigarettes flipped into one sleeve. He weight-lifts a secondhand mower onto the bed of his rusty pick-up.

Clay climbs into the truck, slides the key into the ignition. It takes a few tries but the engine finally turns over.

6 EXT. PACIFIC COAST HIGHWAY - DAY
Clay’s truck sails down the road, "Hound Dog" blaring on the radio. MAIN TITLES END.

7 EXT. COLONIAL-STYLE HOUSE - DAY
Sprinklers twirl on a grassy slope outside a rambling clapboard house. Below, a swimming pool forms a perfect rectangle of still water. A title reads: SANTA MONICA CANYON. 1957.
The pick-up drives past. Clay parks in the back, hops out.

ANGLE - HOUSE

8 INT. HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - DAY
The shadow is a man with dove white hair, wearing a dress shirt and seersucker jacket. This is JAMES WHALE, age 57, he’s really 60.

DAVID
I’d have more peace of mind if the live-in nurse were still here.

HANNA
She was nothing but bother. I not like her, Mr. Jimmy not like her.
We do better if you live-in again, Mr. David.

In the dining room, visible through open double doors, DAVID LEWIS, 55, speaks softly with the housekeeper, HANNA. She is a squat, muffin-faced Hungarian woman in her late 50s, dressed in black, her hair cinched in a tight bun. She speaks with a thick accent.

DAVID
You’ll contact me if there’s an emergency?

HANNA
Yes, I call you at this number. (calls out)
Mr. Jimmy? More coffee?

WHALE
What? Oh yes. Why not?

He moves into the dining room, sits opposite David.
"Sleep is nothing but false dreams. Better sleep instead of false, false dreams. Hardly sleep at all"

Hanna ignores him, returns to the kitchen.

DAVID

She tells me you haven't been sleeping well.

WHALE

It's the ridiculous pills they prescribe. If I take them, I spend the next day as stupid as a stone. If I don't, my mind seems to go off in a hundred directions at once --

DAVID

Then take the pills.

WHALE

I wanted to be alert for your visit today. Especially since I saw so little of you in the hospital.

The remark hits its target.

DAVID

I'm sorry, Jimmy. But with this movie and two difficult stars --

(stands)

"The fault is not in ourselves but in our stars."

DAVID

(too anxious to laugh)

You remember how a production eats up one's life.

WHALE

Oh, David. There's no pleasure in making you feel guilty.

(stands)

You better go, my boy. You'll be late for that plane.

David extends his hand, but Whale draws him into a hug. (X)

Hanna escorts David to the door. Whale drifts back to the window, watches as Clay révs up the lawnmower, creating a cloud of white smoke. We CUT TO:

9 EXT. STREETS OF DUDLEY - DAY (1900)

A bean-pole child with flaming red hair (WHALE at age 12) stares up at the coal smoke pouring from a seemingly endless row of chimneys. We're in Dudley, a factory town in the English Midlands region known as the Black Country.
The half-dressed body only makes him feel old, detached & oddly unreal. He sighs & turns away from window, determined to get on with his day.

he doesn't really need a cane but he wouldn't want to feel in 'presence', a shamper, a beautiful morning.

It feels just a little that he has a body.
SARAH WHALE (O.S.)
Stop lagging behind, Jimmy. We'll be late for church.

YOUNG WHALE

Yes, Mum.

Whale runs to catch up to his six brothers and sisters. His father, WILLIAM WHALE, frowns at the boy's prissy trot.

WILLIAM WHALE

Straighten up, son.

Young Whale's movements thicken into a dim imitation of manly reserve. The Whale family marches up a steeply mounting street to Dixon's Green Methodist Church.

INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - DAY

Whale's eyes tighten. He focuses on Clay Boone as he peels off his T-shirt, revealing a tattoo on his upper right forearm.

Whale's eyes tighten. He focuses on Clay Boone as he peels off his T-shirt, revealing a tattoo on his upper right forearm.

WHALE

Hanna? Who's the new yardman?

HANNA

Bone? Boom? Something Bee. Mr. David hire him while you were in the hospital. He came cheap.

Whale nods, chooses a walking stick. He emerges into the sunlight.

EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BACKYARD - DAY

Whale moves jauntily down the hill, singing to himself:

WHALE

The bells of hell go ting-a-ling
For you but not for me.
Oh death where is thy sting-a-ling?
Grave where thy victory?

Whale steps up next to Clay.

WHALE

Good morning.

CLAY

(not looking up)
Mornin'.

WHALE

My name is Whale. This is my house.
first time @ 'studio since stroke.
Nice place.

And your name is --?

Boone. Clayton Boone.

I couldn’t help but notice your tattoo. That phrase? Death Before Dishonor. What does it mean?

Just that I was in the Marines.

Good for you. The Marines. How admirable. You must have served in Korea.

Clay shrugs nonchalantly.

Getting to be a warm day. A scorcher, as you Yanks call it.

Yeah. I better get on with my work.

Whale clears his throat behind the back of his hand.

When you’re through, Mr. Boone, feel free to make use of the pool. We’re quite informal here. You don’t have to worry about a suit.

Clay glances warily at Whale.

No thanks. I got another job to get to this afternoon.

Whale holds Clay’s look.

Some other time, perhaps? Keep up the fine work.

Whale heads down the hill, smiling to himself. Pleased to be naughty again.

The room is filled with unframed canvasses, many of them copies of paintings by the Old Masters.
Whale rolls out the easel, lifts a half-painted canvas into position. He stares at the blotches of color, trying to remember what he intended to paint.

"I fear that life strikes an easel not only all memory of a picture, but the ability even to think in picture."

Whale pulls out a heavy volume on Rembrandt, opens to a black-and-white plate of "The Polish Rider." We CUT TO:

13 INT. WHALE HOUSE - DUDLEY - NIGHT (1908)

A rough pencil outline of the same painting. Whale, age 16, sits on his bed, ignoring the roughhousing of the three younger BROTHERS who share the room. The door opens and Whale's mother SARAH enters.

SARAH WHALE
Jimmy. The privy needs cleaning.

WHALE
Quite so, mum. To the privy.

And he heads cheerfully out of the room. His mother shakes her head.

SARAH WHALE
"Quite so."
(calls out)
Jimmy Whale. Who are ya to put on airs?
(X)

But Whale is already out the door. We CUT TO:

14 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - DAY

Whale studies his face in the mirror. He gives his white hair a few final licks with his silver-backed brush.

15 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - KITCHEN - DAY

Whale comes in from the bedroom.

WHALE
There is iced tea, Hanna? Cucumber sandwiches?
Which book?
he can't read.
The doorbell rings.

HANNA
Yes, Mr. Jimmy.
(smiles)
An interview. After so many years. Very exciting.

WHALE
Don’t be daft. It’s just a student from the university.

The doorbell rings.

16 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - DAY

Whale settles into his club chair and opens a book, pretending to read until Hanna ushers in the visitor.

HANNA
Mr. Kay, sir.

WHALE
(feigning surprise)
Yes?

Whale looks up at EDMUND KAY, 22, a slim boy who rests his weight on one slouched hip, his arms twined behind him. There is a look of mild disappointment on Whale’s face as he realizes that Kay is a baby poof.

WHALE
Ah, Mr. Kay. I’d almost forgotten. My guest for tea.

Whale stands and holds out his hand.

KAY
Mr. Whale, this is such an honor. You’re one of my favorite all-time directors. I can’t believe I’m meeting you.

WHALE
(gently, teasing self-deprecating)
No. I expect you can’t.

KAY
And this is your house. Wow. The house of Frankenstein. (looks around) I thought you’d live in a spooky old mansion or villa.

WHALE
One likes to live simply.

KAY
I know. People’s movies aren’t their lives.
He suddenly growls out an imitation of Boris Karloff.

KAY

Love dead. Hate living.

Kay laughs, a high, girlish giggle. Whale fights a cringe with a polite smile.

KAY

That's my favorite line in my favorite movie of yours. "Bride of Frankenstein."

WHALE

Is it now? Hanna? I think we'll take our tea down by the swimming pool.

It's clear from Hanna's frown that she doesn't approve of the idea. Whale ignores her, turns back to Kay.

WHALE

Will that be good for you, Mr. Kay?

Sure.

WHALE

(Opens the back door)

After you then.

Whale inspects the boy from behind, noticing his wide hips and plumpish posterior.

17 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BACKYARD - DAY

Kay's hands flap animatedly as Whale leads him down to the pool.

KAY

I love the great horror films. And yours are the best. "The Old Dark House." "The Invisible Man." They look great and have style. And funny!

Whale points to a small shingled house near the pool.

WHALE

This is the studio where I paint.

KAY

Nice.

(refusing to be sidetracked)

And your lighting and camera angles. You've got to go back to

18 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - UPPER PATIO - DAY

Clay Boone gulps some water from the garden hose. He glances down at the pool, where Kay and Whale sit in cast-iron chairs.

HANNA

Time for you to leave.

Clay turns to Hanna, who holds a tray loaded with finger sandwiches and a pitcher of iced tea.

CLAY

I'm on my way.

She doesn't move until Clay starts off.

19 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - POOLSIDE - DAY

Kay flips open his steno pad.

WHALE

So, Mr. Kay? What did you want to know?

KAY

Everything. Start at the beginning.

WHALE

I was born outside London, the only son of a minister who was a master at Harrow. Grandfather was a bishop. Church of Eng...

Whale's tongue trips on the word, his voice suddenly drowned out by the blast of a factory whistle. We CUT TO:

20 INT. FACTORY SHOP FLOOR - DUDLEY - DAY (1908)

Fiery melt is poured into molds on the shop floor of a machine parts factory. WHALE, 16, grips the hot casting with tongs. His father WILLIAM, his face blackened with grime, hammers away at the flaws. A heavy blow causes young Whale to drop the mold, prompting catcalls and sneers on the floor. There is a look of genuine fear in Whale's eyes as he looks up at his singed, beast-like father. We CUT TO:

21 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BACKYARD - DAY

Kay clears his throat softly.
The wish of another thing being so fine.

...
Mr. Whale?

KAY

Whale smiles politely to cover his momentary disorientation.

WHALE

Yes?

KAY

Your father was a schoolmaster?

WHALE

Of course. I attended Eton -- it wouldn't do for a master's son to attend where his father taught. I was to go up to Oxford but the war broke out and I never made it. The Great War, you know. You had a Good war, but we had a great one.

He glances to see if the boy smiles at the quip.

WHALE

You can't imagine what life was like after the Armistice. The twenties in London were one long bank holiday, a break from everything dour and respectable. I had a knack with pencil and paper, so I was hired to design sets for stage productions.

Hanna comes down the path with the tray. She places it on the table.

WHALE

Thank you, Hanna. Very nice.

Hanna remains planted next to the table.

WHALE

You can go now.

She makes an audible sigh and starts back up the hill.

WHALE

There was one play in particular, a beautiful, grim study of war called "Journey's End". Every experienced director turned it down, so I offered myself. Bullying and begging for the job, "Journey's End" made the careers of everyone associated with it. It was only a matter of time until Hollywood beckoned.
WE ARE MIGHTY

WHERE ARE YOUR PARENTS?

NOTE

OF COURSE, I AGREE. BUT IT'S SOPHISTICATED, A WEAPON. I NEED TO TAKE CARE OF IT. I CAN'T DO THAT.

I'M NOT SURE IF I CAN HELP YOU WITH THAT.

I JUST WANTED TO TALK TO YOU. I'M HERE TO HELP.

Thank you.

How can I help you today?

You seem to struggle with an issue.

Can you tell me more about it?
KAY
How much longer before we get to "Frankenstein"?

WHALE
Am I correct in assuming, Mr. Kay, that it's only my horror pictures you're interested in?

KAY
Oh no, I want to hear everything. You made twenty pictures in all--

WHALE
Twenty-one. The romantic comedies and dramas were much more to my liking. The horror pictures were trifles. Grand guignol for the masses.

KAY
But it's the horror movies you'll be remembered for.

An abrupt look of anger flashes across Whale's face.

WHALE
I am not dead yet, Mr. Kay.

KAY
No. I never said you were. Or will be soon.

Kay leans over the steno pad, determined to be more worthy.

KAY
So. "Journey's End" brought you to Hollywood--

WHALE
I have a proposal, Mr. Kay. This mode of questioning is getting old, don't you think?

KAY
I don't mind. (eagerly)

WHALE
Let's make it more interesting. I will answer any question you ask. But, for each answer, you must remove one article of clothing.

Kay's mouth pops open.
KAY
That's funny, Mr. Whale.
It is, isn't it? My life as a game of strip poker. Shall we play?

You're serious.

Quite. It will make you squint and grin.

Then the rumors are true?

What rumors might those be?

That you were forced to retire because, uh -- a sex scandal.

A homosexual scandal, you mean? For me to answer a question of that magnitude, you'll have to remove both your shoes and your socks.

Kay just sits there, squinting and grinning.

You're a dirty old man.

Whale tilts his head as if brushing off a compliment. Kay kicks off his penny loafers, bends over to remove his socks.

You are kind to indulge your elders in their vices. As I indulge the young in theirs.

Two pale feet emerge. Whale leans forward to examine them. He leans back again.

No. There was no scandal.

And he reaches into his coat for a cigar. Whale's hand trembles as he slices a hole at the base, then lights the cigar with a wooden match, sucking and rotating until the tip is roundly lit.

My only other vice. I suppose you'd like a fuller answer to your question.

Kay nods.
It will cost you your sweater.

Kay hesitates a moment, then sets his pen aside to pull the sweater over his head, revealing a sleeveless T-shirt.

KAY
Too warm for a sweater anyway.

You must understand how Hollywood was twenty years ago. Nobody cared a tinker's cuss who slept with whom, so long as you kept it out of the papers. And a director? To care about our behavior would have been like worrying over the morals of a plumber before letting him mend your pipes. Outside of Hollywood, who knows who George Cukor is, much less what he does with those boys from the malt shops along Santa Monica?

Kay stares at him in disbelief.

KAY
George Cukor? Who made "A Star Is Born"? I never guessed.

Take-off-your-vest and I'll tell you a story.

Kay plucks at his T-shirt, glancing toward the house.

WHALE
Don't be shy. There's time to stop before you go too far.

KAY
I guess.

Kay peels off the shirt and tosses it on his shoes and sweater.

George is famous for his Saturday dinner parties. Great artists, writers, society folk, all rubbing elbows with Hollywood royalty. But how many of those oh-so-proper people know about the Sunday brunches that follow? Gatherings of trade eating leftovers, followed by some strenuous fun and frolic in the pool.

(MORE)
The slightest irritation tightened threads already taut in his mind.

He desperately needs his guest to draw him from this state.
WHALE (cont’d)
(flicks an ash)
If a goat like that can continue about his business, my more domestic arrangements could’ve raised very few eyebrows. [NO SCANDAL]
The revelation seems to have left Kay a little shaken. He flips to a blank page.

KAY
Can we talk about the horror movies now?

WHALE (ready, now what else)
Certainly, Mr. Kay. Is there anything in particular you want to know?

KAY
Will you tell me everything you remember about making "Frankenstein?"

He glances down at his few remaining articles of clothing.

KAY
Can that count as one question?

WHALE
Of course.

WHALE
I can’t believe I’m doing this.

Kay stands to unbuckle his belt, glancing around the yard again. He unzips and steps out of his sharply creased flannel legs. His thighs are thin and pale.

KAY
Just like going swimming, isn’t it?

WHALE
Maybe you’d like a swim when we’re through. I never swim myself, so the pool tends to go to waste.

KAY

WHALE
Righto. Let me see.

WHALE swallows a wince, trying to block the pain pushing against his skull.
standing in boxes + barbed wire + headache.

he freezes terrified there will be more pain. Is that death. He wants death to save him from near total invisibility. No ask yet, just yet.
Universal wanted me for another story, and wanted me so baldly -- I mean badly, not baldly. They gave the pick of stories being developed, and I picked that one.

KAY
Who came up with the Monster's makeup and look?

WHALE
My idea. Mostly. My sketches.
Big heavy brow. Head flat on top so they could take out the old brain and put in the new, like tinned beef.

KAY
He's one of the great images of the twentieth century. As important as the Mona Lisa.

WHALE

WHALE
Whale clutches at the air, suddenly notices that his hand is empty. He looks down and sees the cigar on the flagstones.

KAY
Boris Karloff. Where did you find him?

WHALE
Boris Karloff, Mr. Whale. How did you cast him?

KAY
Whale bends down to retrieve his cigar -- and the change of gravity drives a spike through his skull.

KAY
Karloff, Mr. Whale. How did you cast him?

WHALE
Please. Excuse me. I must go lie --

He forces himself up with one hand. Kay finally looks up, notices Whale's colorless lips and desperate eyes.

KAY
Mr. Whale? You all right?

WHALE
I just need to lie down. Studio. Daybed in studio.

WHALE
Whale lurches from the table. Kay jumps forward, catching him under an arm. to bring over pain with pain makes pain worse
KAY
Oh my God. What's wrong, Mr. Whale? Is it your heart?

WHALE
Head. Not heart.

He leans against Kay, who leads him toward the studio.

WHALE
Forgive me.

EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - DAY

Hanna runs down the path, clutching the front of her apron in two tight fists.

INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - STUDIO - DAY

Hanna swings open the screen door -- and grimaces when she sees Kay in his BVDs. He is kneeling next to Whale, who is stretched out on the daybed.

HANNA
Water. Glasses at the sink.

She goes to Whale, scooping different bottles from the pocket of her apron.

HANNA
Which ones? I bring them all.

WHALE
Painkiller. Luminal

She empties two capsules into her palm. Whale tilts them into his mouth and takes the glass of water Kay passes over Hanna's shoulder. Whale swallows the pills, then glances up at Kay, feigning surprise.

WHALE
Mr. Kay. You're not dressed.

Kay frantically crosses his arms over his chest and middle, turns to Hanna.

KAY
I was going to take a swim.

WHALE
So you did. I'm sorry I spoiled it for you. You should probably go home.

KAY
Right.

Kay hurries outside to retrieve his clothes. Hanna undoes Whale's bow tie. She makes no attempt to be gentle.
Hanna breathes deeply, trying to block the throbbing sound in his brain. We CUT TO:

24 INT. FACTORY SHOP FLOOR - DUDLEY - DAY (1908)

The noise is deafening -- the clank of chains, the screech of wheels and the endless banging of hammers. William Whale continues to knock away at the hot casting. The rhythmic sound blends into the insistent knocking of:

25 A FIST

which smashes against sheet metal.

26 INT. CLAY’S TRAILER - DAY

Clay Boone’s eyes dart open.

DWIGHT (O.S.)

Boone! You awake? Eight o’clock.

CLAY

Fuck off!

DWIGHT (O.S.)

You told me to get you up, asshole.

A baseball-capped head is visible through the louvered glass in the trailer’s door. DWIGHT JOAD, 30, Clay’s neighbor, squints to see inside.

CLAY

I’m up. Thanks.

DWIGHT

Hasta la vista, Boone. And give my best to the jail bait.

Clay glances over, seems surprised to see a naked back facing him on the bare mattress.

CLAY
Hey, um... Rose --

The girl stirs, turns to face him. She is 18 at most.

DAISY
Daisy.

CLAY
Huh?

DAISY
My name is Daisy.

CLAY
Time to go, Daisy.

She presses her naked body against Clay's.

DAISY
You know. I could help you fix up this place real nice.

Clay takes a deep breath, trying to clear the gumminess from his brain.

CLAY
Don't you have to be somewhere? Like high school maybe.

DAISY
I gave it up for Lent.

Daisy smiles at her own joke. Clay frowns.

CLAY
Right.

(jumps up from the bed)
Time to hit the road, kid.

EXT. TRAILER PARK - DAY

Daisy jumps out of the trailer, wearing a saffron-colored sun dress and matching pumps. She heads toward the road, struggling to keep her balance.

Clay climbs into his truck, eases onto the highway. He honks as he passes Daisy, who's walking backward with her thumb out. He grins when she gives him the finger, then floors it.

Clay's pick-up sails down the road, the Pacific Ocean providing a brilliant, Technicolor blue backdrop.

28 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - STUDIO - DAY

WHALE ponders the half-painted canvas, clearly distressed by his lack of progress. The stillness is punctured by the roar of Clay’s lawnmower coming to life. Whale smiles, puts down his brush.

29 EXT. WHALE’S HOUSE - BACKYARD - DAY

Clay hoists the mower on its rear wheels to clean it out. He stops, turns around, feeling someone’s eyes watching him.

WHALE (O.S.)
(singing)
The bells of hell go ting-a-ling...

The chassis slips from Clay’s hand; the mower slams upright with a bang. He looks around, spots Whale inside the studio.

Everything alright? Drop something, Mr. Boone?

CLAY Just cleaning my tools. Sorry to disturb you.

The screen door squeaks open, clatters shut. A leather slipper and rubber-tipped cane appear. Whale strolls into view, smiling.

WHALE I was just about to ask Hanna to bring down iced tea. I’d like it very much if you’d join me.

CLAY I stink to high heaven right now.

WHALE The honest sweat of one’s brow. I assure you I won’t be offended. Let me tell Hanna to bring tea for two.

WHALE’s cane trembles in his skeletal hand. His frailty chips away at Clay’s resolve.

WHALE Or would you prefer a beer?

CLAY No. Iced tea’s fine.

WHALE —— Smashing. Splendid ——
The coat is matching... He sits forward, with his legs crossed at knees, an elbow on the top knee, one finger tapping his panting lower lip.
Clay hoes the crumbs of grass off his arms. He dries his hands and arms with his hat, then wads it up and stuffs it into his shirt to wipe out his armpits.

30 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - STUDIO - DAY

Clay stands at the screen door.

WHALE

Come in, Mr. Boone.

Whale sits on a daybed, next to a pile of newspapers. He gestures at a wooden armchair across from him.

WHALE

My shop, my studio. Hardly somewhere in which a sweaty workman should feel out of place.

Clay glances at the unframed canvases on the wall and stacked in the corners.

CLAY

These are your paintings?

What? Oh yes. They are now anyway.

CLAY

Excuse me, but -- are you famous?

WHALE ("smile extend & winks")

You know what they say. If you have to ask --

CLAY

I'm just a hick who cuts lawns. But some of these look familiar.

WHALE (long silence)

They were familiar when I painted them. That one's copied from a Dutch still-life done almost three hundred years ago. And that's a Rembrandt.

CLAY

They're just copies then. Gotcha.

WHALE

But before I retired, you might say I had a brief time in the sun. Fame, as it were. Tell me, do you like motion pictures?
CLAY
Sure, everybody does. When I was a kid I'd go with my sister twice a week. Why? Were you were an actor or something?

WHALE
In my youth, yes, but never in Hollywood. No, I was merely a director here.

CLAY
Yeah? What were some of your movies?

WHALE
This and that. The only ones you may have heard of are the "Frankenstein" pictures.

CLAY Really?

Clay sits up, surprised, skeptical and impressed all at once.

CLAY
"Frankenstein" and "Bride of" and "Son of" and all the rest?

WHALE
I made only the first two. The others were done by hacks.

CLAY
Still. You must be rich. Making a couple of famous movies like those.

WHALE
Merely comfortable. Here's Hanna with our refreshments. Can you get the door?

Clay jumps up to open the screen door. Hanna walks past, refusing to look at him. She sets the tray on a table very hard, ringing the glasses and silverware.

HANNA
How are you feeling, Mr. Jimmy? How is your mind today?

WHALE (for Clay's benefit)
My mind's lovely. And yours?

Hanna flares her nostrils at him.
HANNA
You remember what the doctor tells us.
Hanna stares up at Clay.

Yes, yes, yes. I merely invited Mr. Boone in for a glass of tea. We'll have a brief chat and he'll finish the yard.

Hanna

I am not forgetting your last brief chat.

WHALE (Shoving her with back his hand)

Just go. We will do the honors without you. We can manage without you.

Hanna stares up at Clay.

Hanna

He looks plenty big. You won't need my help if anything goes flooey.

Go. WHALE

She shakes her head and marches out the door. Clay returns to his chair and sits down again.

WHALE

When they stay in your employ too long, servants begin to think they're married to you. Please, Mr. Boone. Help yourself.

CLAY

What did she mean by going flooey?

WHALE (Smiles at Clay)

I returned recently from a stay in hospital.

CLAY

What was wrong?

Nothing serious. A touch of stroke.

Clay nods, chugs his tea. When he lowers the glass, he finds the old man watching him.

WHALE (Smiles, raises sea far Boone in abject ‘shock’)

You must excuse me for staring, Mr. Boone. But you have a marvelous head.

CLAY

Huh?
(To an artistic eye, you understand.)
Have you ever modeled?

CLAY
You mean, like posed for pictures?

WHALE
Sat for an artist. Been sketched.

CLAY
(with a laugh)
What's to sketch?

WHALE
You have the most-architectural skull. And your nose. Very expressive.

CLAY
Broke is more like it.

WHALE
But expressively broken. How did it happen?

CLAY
Football in college.

WHALE
You went to university?

CLAY
Just a year. I dropped out to join the Marines.

WHALE
Yes. You were a Marine.

Whale's gaze deepens. He laughs lightly.

WHALE
I apologize for going on like this. It's the Sunday painter in me. Of course I can understand your refusal. It's a great deal to ask of someone.

CLAY
You mean -- you really want to draw me?

WHALE
Indeed. I'd pay for the privilege of drawing your head. (I think it's made .

But why?

CLAY
for a split scene, old man is préférable, still, mouth, stronger, eye unfurling
Even an amateur artist needs a subject to inspire him.

CLAY
And it's just my head you want? Nothing else?

WHALE
What are you suggesting? You'll charge extra if I include a hand or a bit of shoulder?

CLAY
You don't want to draw pictures of me in my birthday suit, right?

WHALE
I have no interest in your body, Mr. Boone. I can assure you of that.

Clay takes a moment to size up Whale -- whose innocent, slightly befuddled smile makes him appear about as threatening as a box of cornflakes.

CLAY
All right then. Sure. I could use the extra dough.

WHALE ("smile remains")
Excellent. We'll have a most interesting time.

Whale lifts his glass, takes a small sip of tea.

31 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - DAY

Clay fetches a pair of hedge clippers from his truck. He can't help stopping by the side-view mirror to look at his face.

32 INT. EXAMINATION ROOM - DAY

Doctors and technicians flash lights into Whale's eyes... test his reflexes... inject him with radioactive isotope. Whale sits very still with his head behind a fluoroscope screen while two doctors murmur over the image.

33 INT. DOCTOR'S OFFICE - DAY

A pair of X rays are slapped wet on a light board. Two skulls, one facing forward, the other in profile. DR. PAYNE, a bland young neurologist, points to a smudge in the side-view X ray.
a cuff-linked wrist balanced on his thigh.
He pretends to be unafraid, unmoved.

They keep telling him, over and over.
DR. PAYNE
This is the area of infarction. By which we mean the portion of brain affected by the stroke.

The venetian blinds of the examining room are closed. Whale sits calmly, flanneled legs crossed at the knees, gazing at his own skull.

DR. PAYNE
You're a lucky man, Mr. Whale. Whatever damage was done by your stroke, it left your motor abilities relatively unimpaired.

DR. PAYNE
You're saying there's an electrical storm in my head?

DR. PAYNE
That's as good a way as any to describe it. I've seen far worse cases. You might even learn to enjoy these walks down memory lane.

WHALE
But the rest of it? The killing headaches. The phantom smells. My inability to close my eyes without thinking a hundred things at once. It's all nothing more than bad electricity?

DR. PAYNE
In a manner of speaking. I've never encountered the olfactory hallucinations, but I'm sure they're related.
What can I do?
So what do I do?
DR. PAYNE
Take the Luminal to sleep, or whenever you feel an attack coming on.

WHALE
You seem to be saying that this isn’t just a case of resting until I’m better. That my condition will continue to deteriorate until the end of my life.

The doctor responds with a sympathetic gaze. Whale nods solemnly.

33A SCENE OMITTED
33B INT. HALLWAY - DAY

Whale makes his way toward the stairs. He passes a stoop-shouldered ELDERLY WOMAN who leans on the arm of her middle-aged DAUGHTER. Then an OLD MAN in a wheelchair, his eyes brimming with bewilderment and despair.

34 EXT. DOCTOR’S OFFICE - DAY

The noon sun is ferociously bright. Whale takes his gold-framed sunglasses from his coat pocket.

35 SCENE OMITTED
36 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - FOYER - DAY

Hanna opens the door. Clay wears dungarees and a white dress shirt.

CLAY
Don’t worry, you already paid me. I’m here because --
This page intentionally left blank for viewing facing pages. Please proceed to next page.
The Master is waiting for you.

She gestures him in, shuts the door.

37 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - KITCHEN - DAY

Clay follows Hanna into the kitchen.

HANNA
He’s down in his studio. Here.
Take this with you.

She thrusts a TV tray toward him. Two glasses, two bottles of beer, a bottle of Coke.

CLAY
It’s your job, lady, not mine.
(hands back the tray)
I’m here so he can draw my picture.

HANNA
I am keeping away. What you are doing is no business of mine.

CLAY
What’re you talking about?

HANNA
What kind of man are you? Are you a good man?

CLAY
Yeah, I’m a good man. Something make you think I’m not?

HANNA
You will not hurt him?

CLAY
Gimme a break. I’m going to sit on my ass while he draws pictures. Is that going to hurt him?

HANNA
No. No.
(closes her eyes)
I am sorry. Forget everything I say. Here. I will take the tray.

CLAY
You do that.

38 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - STUDIO - DAY

Clay opens the squeaking door and enters behind Hanna. Whale stands at a drafting table, sharpening a pencil. Hanna sets the tray down.
Male can't remember why he went to Maine. Some rich man but it's exciting to be brightened by another human. He needs to play with fire. He wants to learn with another, if only to take him out of himself for a few hours.

What gives his full attention to attaching a large pad of paper to board on his east facing wall clamps & screws Very good, Hanna. Now goodbye.

She goes toward the door, wrinkling her forehead at Clay. The screen door bangs shut.

WHALE

I'm sure you'd like something to wet your whistle while I work.

WHALE

We'll go slowly today. Since this is your first time as a model.

Clay sits. He pulls a "TV Guide" out of his back pocket.

CLAY

Did you see this? They're showing one of your movies tomorrow night.

WHALE

You don't say? Which picture?

CLAY

"Bride of Frankenstein."

WHALE

Hmm. I much prefer "Show Boat" or "The Invisible Man." Shall we begin?

Clay takes a swig of beer and sets the glass on the floor.

CLAY

Ready when you are.

WHALE

That shirt, Mr. Boone.

CLAY

It's new.

WHALE

I'm sorry. It's too white, too distracting. Would it be asking too much for you to take it off?

CLAY

I'm not wearing an undershirt.

WHALE

Pish posh, Mr. Boone. I'm not your Aunt Tilly.
CLAY

But it's just my face you want to draw.

WHALE (whispering)

Oh if it's going to make you uncomfortable...

Perhaps we can find something else for you to wear.

He lifts a drop cloth off a footlocker, revealing a stack of "Physique" magazines. Whale casually covers them with a newspaper.

WHALE (whispering)

We could wrap this like a toga around your shoulders. Would that help you overcome your schoolgirl shyness?

CLAY

All right already. I'll take it off. Kind of warm in here anyway.

He unbuttons the shirt and pulls it off.

WHALE (decisive, directed)

Yes. Much better.

Here.

Clay adjusts his belt buckle as Whale hangs the shirt on a wall peg. He moves to the easel again.

WHALE

I think we'll have you sit slightly sideways, so you can rest one arm on the back of the chair. Yes.

Just so.

The arm with the tattoo faces the easel. Clay smirks.

CLAY

Take a picture, it lasts longer.

WHALE (light laughter)

That's exactly what I intend to do.

A clatter of pencils in the easel's tray, followed by a moment of silence. Finally, a low, whistly scratch. Clay concentrates on keeping still, focusing on an open window.

WHALE

You seem to have no idea when you are, Mr. Boone. It has to do with how snugly your face fits your skull.
Clay wipes a thin line of sweat from his waist.
The mushy sketch that had turned into an automatic doodle when he figured no purpose of ever pretending to draw, the sketchy pencilled shapes of cross-hatching and squiggle are clearly visible.

He seems an escaped boy, subject as clay is.

"Potatoes, a clay smell."
WHALE
Would you be more comfortable barefoot? Feel free to remove your boots and socks.

CLAY
No. I'm fine.

WHALE
It's a bit like being at the doctor, isn't it? You have to remain perfectly still while I examine and scrutinize you.

Whale suddenly sniffs, as if smelling something. He sniffs several times more but continues to draw.

WHALE
(to himself)
Dripping?
(to Clay)
Do you ever eat dripping in this country? The fat from roasts and such, congealed in jars. Used like butter on bread or try

CLAY
Sounds like something you feed the dog.

WHALE
It is. Only the poorest families ever ate it. We kept ours in a crockery jar.

CLAY
Your family ate dripping?

WHALE
(catching himself)
Of course not. As I said, only poor people --

WHALE
I'm sorry. I've just realized how terribly ironic it all is.

CLAY
What?

WHALE
I've spent most of my life outrunning my past. Now it's flooding all over me.

Clay stares out blankly.
Clay

Dear [Name],

I'm fine. How are you?

I found your note on my desk. It seems like a note with a score.

I'm still thinking about it. Maybe it's just a commentary on the score?

Best,

Clay
There's something about the openness of your face that makes me want to speak the truth. Yes, my family ate dripping. Beef dripping and four to a bed, and a privy out back in the alley. Are you also from the slums, Mr. Boone?

We weren't rich. But we weren't poor either.

No, you were middle class, like all Americans.

I guess you'd say we lived on the wrong side of the tracks.

In Dudley there were more sides of the tracks than any American can imagine. Every Englishman knows his place. And if you forget, there's always someone to remind you. My family had no doubts about who they were. But I was an aberration in that household, a freak of nature. I had imagination, cleverness, joy. Where did I get that? Certainly not from them.

Whale's voice has changed, becoming more pinched and nasal.

They took me out of school when I was fourteen and put me in a factory. They meant no harm. They were like a family of farmers who've been given a giraffe, and don't know what to do with the creature except harness him to the plow.

Whale seems completely lost in the past by now.

Hatred was the only thing that kept my soul alive in that soul-killing place. And among those men I hated was my own poor, dumb father. Who put me in that hell to begin with.

Whale peers out from behind the square of paper. He pales when he sees his father William, his face covered with grime, glaring at him from across the room. Whale retreats Art we adequately, Dr. M. Same, we wouldn't be more endure us on birth?

behind the pad, takes a breath.

CLAY (O.S.)

Mr. Whale?

Relief floods Whale's face. He looks out, smiles at Clay.

WHALE

You have to excuse me, Mr. Boone. Since my stroke, I am often overcome with nostalgia.

CLAY

I don't mind. I'm not crazy about my old man either.

Whale rubs a hand across his eyes and steps into the open.

WHALE

Why don't we break for five minutes? You probably want to stretch your legs.

Whale pulls the cover sheet over the pad to hide what he's drawn so far.

Dwight (V.O.)

So you just sat there while this old limey banged his gums?

39 INT. HARRY'S BEACHCOMBER - NIGHT

The place is dead. There's only Clay and Dwight sitting at the bar with the owner, Harry, a balding hep cat with a scraggly tuft of beard. And, in a booth, Kid Saylor, a cocky 20-year-old, necking with a pony-tailed teenager.

CLAY

I liked it. You learn stuff listening to old-timers.

(to Harry)

You ever hear of this Whale fellow?

HARRY

Can't say that I have. Can't say I've heard of a lot of people though.

CLAY

If you don't believe me, let's watch this movie. See if his name's on it. How about it, Harry? Can I watch my damn movie?
HARRY
I told you. I don’t turn on the TV except for the fights.

BETTY CARTWRIGHT appears behind the bar, lugging a bucket of ice from the storeroom. She’s an attractive woman in her early 30s, big-boned and almost as tall as Clay.

BETTY
A spooky movie. Just what this place needs tonight.

DWIGHT
Couldn’t make it any deader, doll. Set me up.

BETTY
Sure. Your friend want one?

Clay reacts to the silent treatment with a tight smile.

DWIGHT
Yeah, one for what’s-his-name here.

She sets down two bottles of Pabst without looking at Clay.

CLAY
Thanks, doll.

BETTY
(to Harry)
I say let the dopes watch their movie. And be grateful Boone’s not cutting Shirley Temple’s lawn.

CLAY
Why is everybody giving me crap tonight?

DWIGHT
Jesus, Boone. You come in here proud as a peacock because some old coot wants to paint your picture. We’re just bringing you back to earth.

BETTY
Sounds screwy to me. I can’t imagine a real artist wanting to spend time looking at that kisser.

CLAY
This kisser wasn’t so bad you couldn’t lay under it a few times.

Ooooh.
Betty glares at Clay, who realizes he's gone too far.

BETTY
I bet this is just some fruit pretending to be famous. So he can get in the big guy's pants.

Dwight
Oooh.

CLAY
What makes you say that?

BETTY
Just thinking aloud.

CLAY
Keep your filthy thoughts to yourself.

BETTY
All right, then. He's interested in you for your conversation. We know what a great talker you are.

CLAY
Fuck you.

BETTY
Not anymore you don't. Doll.

CLAY
(explodes)
We're watching the movie, Harry. You got that? We are watching my fucking movie.

HARRY
Calm down, Clay. Just calm down. We'll watch it.

CLAY
Good. Fine.

Harry reaches up, turns on a battered Motorola. On the tv, a voice announces: "Tonight, Boris Karloff in 'The Bride of Frankenstein.'" The titles come on. Ending with the phrase "Directed by", which floats over a white blob. The blob jumps forward to form letters: "James Whale."

CLAY
What did I tell you?

The movie starts. The Monster being roasted alive in the flaming wreckage of a mill.

BETTY
This looks corny.
CLAY
Go wash glasses if you don’t like it.

In a flooded crater under the mill, the Monster kills an old man. He climbs up, flips the man’s wife into the pit below. An owl blinks impassively.

DWIGHT
Not bad. Two down and it’s just started.

Minnie, a hatchet-faced woman with fluttering ribbons, is now alone with the Monster.

40 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

Whale and Hanna are in bathrobes and slippers, and there is a glass of milk and a plate of cookies on Whale’s TV tray. On the tv, Minnie (played by UNA O’CONNOR) squeaks and whimpers and screams. Whale laughs.

WHALE
Wonderful old Una. Gobbling like an old turkey hen.

But Hanna isn’t amused. She unclenches her arms to close the bathrobe over her throat.

HANNA
Oh, that monster. How could you be working with him?

WHALE
Don’t be silly, Hanna. He’s a very proper actor. And the dullest fellow imaginable.

Minnie flees in a bowlegged jig up the hill. Whale smiles again.

41 INT. HARRY’S BEACHCOMBER - NIGHT

On the tv, Dr. Pretorius (played by Ernest Thesiger) delivers a toast with inimitably ripe enunciation: "To a new world of gods and monsters!" Dwight and Harry and Betty all laugh.

BETTY
These old movies are such a hoot. They thought they were being scary, but they’re just funny.

CLAY
(defensively)
Maybe it’s supposed to be funny.
BETTY

Comedy is comedy and scary is scary. You don't mix them.
Suddenly the tinny tv soundtrack is drowned out by the voice of Elvis Presley. Kid Saylor bends over the jukebox, wagging his denim butt and tapping a high-top sneaker.

CLAY
Hey! Some of us are watching a movie!

SAYLOR
Go ahead. Free country.

Clay jumps from his stool. Saylor sees him coming, steps aside.

SAYLOR
You want me to turn it down?

Clay slams the heel of his hand against Saylor's chest. The boy staggers backward. Clay grabs the corner of the jukebox and jerks it from the wall; the needle scratches across the song. Saylor holds up both hands in a nervous surrender.

SAYLOR
Hey, I didn’t know. It’s your favorite movie. Sorry, okay?

Clay returns to the bar and uprights the stool. Saylor escorts his girl to the door.

HARRY
You’re like a dog with a bone over this movie, Clay.

CLAY
I just want to watch it, okay?

On the tv, the blind man thanks God for sending him a friend.

42 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

Hanna’s frown pops open.

HANNA
He is not going to kill the old man?

WHALE
No, Hanna. My heart isn’t that black.

In a crypt, the Monster meets Dr. Pretorius, who is having a midnight snack on top of a closed coffin. "Friend?" the monster asks. "Yes, I hope so," answers Pretorius, without batting an eyelash. He offers the Monster a drink, then adds: "Have a cigar. They’re my only weakness."
He definitely has a thing with life and allowed him.

But does he love death? No, not yet.

SAYOR
He's looking on too much thinking about death.

CRAIG
I have no idea what's next.

CLAY
I have no idea what's next.

LIGHT
Light the fringe closer, one more time.

EIGHT
Doctor, come up! Let's talk.

SAYOR
He's looking on too much thinking about death.
WHALE

The cigars were my own brand. So that I could have the leftovers.

On the tv, the Monster groans: "Love dead. Hate. living." Whale's focus sharpens, prompted by the unexpected discussion of death.

43 INT. HARRY'S BEACHCOMBER - NIGHT

The Monster holds a skull in both hands and happily growls, "Wiiife." Betty shudders, for real this time.

HARRY
Sick stuff. Necrophilia. I wonder if they knew how sick they were.

CLAY
The Monster's lonely and he wants a friend, a girlfriend, somebody. What's sick about that?

44 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

Dr. Frankenstein and Pretorius make their final preparations. Frankenstein inquires where the fresh heart came from. "There are always accidental deaths occurring," Pretorius replies. "Always." Once again, Whale responds to the talk of death.

45 INT. HARRY'S BEACHCOMBER - NIGHT

Finally, the Bride comes to life. She looks up, down, left, right, uncertain who she is. The Monster stares tenderly. "Friend?" He timidly touches her arm and she screams.

BETTY
All right! You don’t want him.

The Monster is heartbroken. Nobody loves him, not even his Bride.

46 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

The Bride shrieks again.

HANNA
She is horrible.

WHALE
She is beautiful.

The Monster's pain turns to anger. He tears through the lab, orders Frankenstein to escape with his wife. But he wants Pretorius and the Bride to stay. "We belong dead." Whale reacts sharply to the line.
The Monster blows up the laboratory and the movie ends. Hanna shivers as she stands.

HANNA
Ugh. I am sorry, Mr. Jimmy, but your movie is not my cup of tea. Still, I am glad there is a happy ending. The bad people are dead and the good people live.

She hits the button on the Magnavox with the flat of her palm.

INT. HARRY'S BEACHCOMBER - NIGHT

Betty turns off the Motorola.

BETTY
Weird movie. Weird, weird, weird.

Harry stands up and stretches. Clay remains seated.

CLAY
So what did you think?

BETTY
Wasn't boring, I'll say that. Funny but creepy too.

DWIGHT
I loved it. I want a switch like that in my trailer, so I can blow us to kingdom come when things don't go my way.

He wobbles when he climbs off his stool.

DWIGHT
Damn but it's drunk in here. Late too. The bride of Dwight is going to bite my head off.

He tilts toward the door.

DWIGHT
You coming, Boone?

CLAY
I think I'll hang around.

HARRY
Go home, Clay. We're closing up.

CLAY
I thought I'd give you a hand since I kept you open.
He waits to see how Betty reacts. She shrugs. Clay goes to the front to shut the windows. He sees Dwight staggering outside by the highway, looking left and right before he races across to the trailer park.

Harry takes his book and cash drawer to the back door.

HARRY
I’m next door if you need me.

He gives Clay one last look and goes out to the breezeway and his apartment.

CLAY
You know what? I think you guys are all jealous.

BETTY
(laughs)
What’s to be jealous of?

CLAY
I’ve gotten to know someone who’s famous.

BETTY
Not so famous any of us have ever heard of him.

CLAY
If he were that famous, he probably wouldn’t give me the time of day.
This way, he’s like my famous person.

(laughs at himself)
Yeah, my own personal famous person. Who treats me like I’m somebody worth talking to.

Clay leans down to plug in the jukebox.

CLAY
You want to go for a swim?

She snaps her mouth wide open and imitates the Bride’s furious cat hiss.

CLAY
What’s that mean?

BETTY
It means it’s too cold to go swimming. And I don’t mean the water.

CLAY
I wasn’t going to try anything.
BETTY
Yeah, and I’m never going to smoke another cigarette.

He patiently waits by the door while Betty turns out the lights. She walks briskly through the glow of the juke box, waving Clay outside with her hand.

EXT. HARRY’S BEACHCOMBER - NIGHT

Betty pulls the door shut and bends over to lock it. Clay catches a glimpse of skin in the side slit of her shirttail.

CLAY
Let’s go for a walk at least. Walk and talk. I really feel like talking tonight.

Betty’s eyes blink in mock surprise.

CLAY
This old guy -- he’s the kind of person I expected to meet when I moved out here. Someone who’s done things with his life.

BETTY
You’re more interested in this old goober than you ever were in me.

CLAY
It’s different. He’s a man. And you have no business calling him a homo.

BETTY
It was just an idea. It never crossed your mind?

CLAY
He’s an artist. Anyway, he’s too old to think about sex.

BETTY
All the old men I know think about nothing but sex.

She opens the door of her Chevy. Clay grabs it with both hands to keep her from getting in.

CLAY
C’mon. What’s eating you tonight?

Betty hesitates, then looks him sharply in the eye.

BETTY
You picked up that girl right in front of me.
Commitment

Commitment, you're more interested in life. You're more interested in life now. You're more interested in life now. You're more interested in life now.
CLAY
Hey, no strings, right? That's what you always said. Just good pals who have the hots for each other.

BETTY
It still hurt. A lot.

CLAY
I didn’t mean to...

BETTY
No, I’m actually kind of glad it happened. It made me wonder what the hell I was doing with my life. Letting you pull me into bed whenever the spirit moved you.

CLAY
You liked it too.

BETTY
Sure. I loved it.

CLAY
If you enjoy it, you should do it.

BETTY
I can’t live like that. Not anymore. I still have time to get things right. Get married again --

CLAY
You mean us?

Betty bursts out laughing.

BETTY
The look on your face! Uh-uh, loverboy. You’re not marriage material. You’re not even boyfriend material. You’re a kid. A big, fun, irresponsible kid.

CLAY
I’m not a kid.

BETTY
What are you then? What will you be ten years from now? Still cutting lawns? Still banging horny divorcees in your trailer?

Clay glares at her, his jaw working forward in anger.

CLAY
I like my life. I’m a free man.
I'm not a kid.

Betty

You mean you're really going to get married?

Cly.

I'm not a kid.

Betty

The look on your face is priceless.

Cly.

You're not married.

Betty

You're not married.

Cly.

You're a kid.

Betty

Where are you going? After all this,

I'm not a kid.

Cly.

I like my life. I'm a free soul.
BETTY
Sure you're free, for now at least.
But how long before you're just alone? Miserable and alone.

Clay's anger jumps from his jaw into his shoulders and arms. He grabs the door handle.

CLAY
So you don't want to fuck. That's what you're telling me?

BETTY
Is that all this conversation means to you? Am I going to put out or not?

CLAY
Damn straight. I'm sick of playing games.

Betty quickly gets into the car. Before she can pull the door shut, Clay slams it on her, hard. Her hands leap in front of her face, as if he'd hit her. The look of fear in her eyes startles Clay out of his rage.

CLAY
Betty, look. This is coming out all wrong --

She frantically turns the key in the ignition and the Chevy pulls out.

BETTY
From here on out, Boone, you're just another tired old face on the other side of the bar.

The car screeches away. Clay stumbles across the highway.

49 EXT. TRAILER PARK - NIGHT

Clay comes to the dump at the end of the canyon. He climbs into it, kicking at loose cans.

CLAY
Fuck!

He shouts the word at the cliff, for the raw, sudden violence of shouting.

CLAY Fuuuck!

A dog in the carport starts to bark. The sound of Clay's pain echoes off the canyon as we CUT TO:
I'm trying to decide which form of sleep he wants to be. "Neural sleep" or "deadly sleep" that will make him a zombie tomorrow.

50 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

Whale is sitting up in bed when Hanna knocks. She enters with a tray loaded with bottles and vials.

HANNA
You will take them all, Mr. Jimmy?

WHALE
I'll be fine, Hanna. Thank you.

HANNA
Good night.

Whale takes the pills, one by one, until he comes to the bottle of Luminal. He opens the pheno bottle to shake out a capsule and a dozen spill into his palm. He stares at them.

51 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - DAY

Hanna opens the door, gasps when she sees Whale lying motionless on the bed. She spots the empty bottle of Luminal.

HANNA
Oh no, Mr. Jimmy.

Hanna kneels next to the body. She makes a Sign of the Cross, launches into a frantic "Hail Mary." We CUT TO:

52 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

Whale snorts at the imagined scene. One by one, he returns the capsules to their bottle, until a single pill remains. He places it on the table, then turns out the lamp and lies on his back in the dark, waiting for sleep.

The distant sound of laughter invades the darkness. Whale sits up, straining to identify the voices. The Bedroom wall opposite him melts away, revealing:

53 INT. SPECIAL MAKEUP TRAILER - UNIVERSAL STUDIOS - DAY (1935)

ELSA LANCHESTER and BORIS KARLOFF sit side by side in dentist chairs, cloths around their necks, heads tilted back. JACK PIERCE, the makeup artist, is patting the hair drawn over a cage on Elsa's head. He looks up, sees Whale, and breaks into a conspiratorial grin. Elsa's eyes are closed; she hasn't heard Whale enter.

ELSA LANCHESTER
You done yet, love? I am absolutely dying for a fag.

Whale tiptoes in for a better look. Karloff has a mouthpiece to help him breathe while the assistant adds another coat of green sizing to still incomplete makeup.
BORIS KARLOFF
(gurgles)
Goo' 'orning, James.

WHALE
Good morning. And a very good morning to you.

Elsa's eyes snap open. There are no mirrors on the walls.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Uh-oh. The way you look at me, James. What have you done this time?

WHALE
Bring a mirror. Let the Bride feast upon her visage.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Boris? Do I look a fright?

Karloff shrugs, irked that she's getting all the attention. Jack Pierce lifts a large mirror.

JACK (nasal New Yorkese)
Behold, the Bride of Frankenstein.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Oh, James.

As Whale observes his star we see her spasms through his eyes -- as a series of dissonant, line-jumping close-ups.

ELSA LANCHESTER
And you said there'd be some of me left. Nobody's going to know me in this getup.

WHALE
Nonsense, my dear. You look extraordinary.

(to an assistant)
Today's script. Quick. And a pencil.

WHALE scans the page of shooting script, the margin marked in pencil: CU, MS, MLS. Whale pencils in a bracket and scribbles: CU a,b,c,d---MOS.

54 INT. SOUNDSTAGE - DAY

The interior of Stage C is completely filled by the laboratory set. Electricians adjust the lights on the wooden tower beside the Bride’s table. COLIN CLIVE (Dr. Frankenstein) and ERNEST THESIGER (Dr. Pretorius) sit off to the side, in full makeup and costume. Clive mumbles earnestly over his script. Thesiger pinches his face over the needle he dips in and out of an embroidery ring.

Whale comes on the set with Elsa on his arm. She walks regally beside him, the train of her long white robe thrown over one arm. There’s a wolf whistle from overhead, and applause, causing Elsa to curtsy to her admirers. Thesiger takes her hand, leans back to study her.

ERNEST THESIGER

My God. Is the audience to presume that Colin and I have done her hair? I thought we were mad scientists, not hairdressers.

ELSA LANCHESTER

Only a mad scientist could do this to a woman.

ERNEST THESIGER

Oh no, my dear. You look absolutely amazing. There’s no way I can compete with you. The scene is yours.

ELSA LANCHESTER

In the sequel, James, two lady scientists should make a monster. And our monster would be Gary Cooper.

ERNEST THESIGER

I would’ve thought Mr. Leslie Howard would be more your line.

More your line.
The sequel to "AN EVENING WITH THE MIGHTY DUCKS," a new Disney Channel Original Movie, "THE MIGHTY OLYMPIANS," will premiere on October 19th.

Do you think you can handle the pressure of being a member of the Mighty Ducks? I'm not sure if I can.
ERNEST THESIGER
My line nowadays runs to Rin Tin Tin. Dogs are so much more dependable than men.

WHALE
Colin? Please. It's time.
(softly, to Thesiger)
How is he today?

ERNEST THESIGER
Stiff as a board.
(calls out)
Yes, Colin. Come see what they've done to our Elsa.

Clive walks over, glumly.

COLIN CLIVE
I'm not at my best today, Jimmy. A touch of flu, you know.

WHALE sees through the excuse, rests an arm on Clive's shoulder.

WHALE
Relax, my boy. You could do this scene in your sleep.

Clive grits his teeth and nods. Whale positions them in front of the upended table, Clive and Thesiger holding Elsa's robe out by the hems. The shadow of the sound boom passes back and forth while they rehearse.

ERNEST THESIGER
I gather we not only did her hair but dressed her. What a couple of queens we are, Colin.

Elsa giggles. Clive looks distraught -- which brings some life to his stiffness. Whale sees this, decides to tune it higher.

WHALE
Yes, a couple of flaming queens. And Pretorius is a little in love with Dr. Frankenstein, you know.

Clive's distress reads clearly now. He is twitchy and alive.

WHALE
Yes. I think it's coming together. Shall we have a go? real question.

He sits in the canvas director's chair, nods to the assistant director.
Quiet on the set!
The warning bell rings.

The lights sizzle and blaze.

Action.

The Bride snaps her head in various directions. Thesiger slopes back, fingers splayed, intoxicated by his creation:

ERNEST THESIGER

The Bride of Frankenstein!

Whale sits with his legs crossed, jogging his raised foot as if conducting the scene with his shoe. Fully engaged, intensely alive. We CUT TO:

55 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

Whale opens his eyes with a start. It takes him several moments to orient himself. He glances at the clock, sees that it is 3:15 am. He is wide awake.

Whale reaches over, picks up the Luminal. He stares at the pill.

WHALE

Luminal. Illumine all.

Whale reluctantly places the pill on his tongue and swallows. He rests his head on the pillow and stares at the ceiling, where the reflection of the window sheers casts an ever-shifting pattern of light and dark. We move down to reveal:

56 INT. PRISON CELL - NIGHT (BLACK & WHITE)

It's a cobblestone cell, a plaster set from "Bride of Frankenstein." Whale sits in a massive chair, straining against thick iron chains, as a lightning storm rages outside. In the distance, heavy footsteps, coming closer, until the cell door is filled with the silhouette of the Monster. Whale hardly dares to breathe as the Monster rips off the door and enters the cell.
The Monster steps into the light, allowing us to see his face for the first time. It is Clay Boone, dressed in a Marine parade uniform. He uses his hedge clippers to cut the chains from around Whale's chest.
Thank you. Thank you so much.

Clay leans down and takes Whale in his arms, cradling him like a child. They move across the sound stage -- Clay carefully sidestepping the lights and cables on the floor -- until they reach the next set:

57 EXT. COUNTRYSIDE - NIGHT

Clay carries Whale past a painted backdrop of a stormy English countryside.

58 INT. FRANKENSTEIN'S LAB - NIGHT

Whale lies on the Bride's table. Clay pulls on a doctor's smock, picks up a scalpel from a table covered with various medical instruments. He carves a thin circle around the top of Whale's forehead. Then, with one deft movement, he pops off Whale's scalp and pulls out the brain. It is soot-covered, charred, used up.

Whale watches with detached fascination as Clay tosses it on the floor, then takes a throbbing, luminous mass from a tray.

Clay inserts the new brain into Whale's skull, sutures the scalp back into place. He fastens the conducting clamps around Whale's temples, then throws the heavy circuit breaker. Lights throb with bursts of energy...loose sparks crackle...rotary sparks create snapping circles of fire...as the energy of the raging storm is harnessed into the machinery.

Clay steps back to take in his handiwork. A sudden look of panic fills Whale's face.

It isn't working. The experiment is a failure.

Clay glances down at Whale, whose breathing is slowing. Realizing that the new brain hasn't taken:

Just go to sleep.

A serenity suffuses Whale's features as he stares up at the pale flicker of lightning. His breathing finally stops, his face a tranquil mask of death. We CUT TO:

59 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - DAY

Whale wakes with a start. He checks the clock, sees that it's past nine. He presses an intercom button on the bedside table.
He saw one detail at a time, his mind stopping there. He made an exciting discovery last night. What was it?

Oh yes. His gardener is going to kill him.

Is there anything going to happen that will bring him back to himself?
Revised 6/16/97

49. (X)

I'm up, Hanna.

Whale sits up, drinks in the daylight. He notices some grass clippings and leaves scattered on the bedspread.

What in God's name --

Whale turns and sees Clay lying next to him. He gasps.

(angrily)
I told you to sleep.

Clay's hands close around Whale's neck. We CUT TO:

60 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - DAY

Whale opens his eyes groggily. He scans the room in panic, clearly unable to get his bearings.

Whale tries to stand but his legs give way beneath him.

61 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BATHROOM - DAY (LATER)

Whale and Hanna stare straight out as she reaches down and unbuttons the tiny buttons on his pajama fly. Whale supports himself with one hand on Hanna's shoulder as he relieves himself with the other.

61A INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - DAY (LATER)

Whale sits up in bed, staring dumbly at the morning paper. Hanna reaches in to take away the breakfast tray.

Does the yardman come today?

Of course, Mr. Jefferson.

A thin smile forms on Whale's face.

62 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - DAY

Clay wheels the lawnmower behind the house. Hanna stands by the kitchen door, frowning.

Something I can do for you?

The Master wants to know if you are free for lunch. I tell him you will be having other plans, but he insists I ask.
CLAY
Got a lawn this afternoon, but I'm free until then.

HANNA
Expect nothing fancy.

Hanna goes inside. Clay rolls the mower down the path.

63 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - KITCHEN - DAY

Clay knocks on the bottom of the Dutch door as he lifts the latch and walks in. He is wearing a fresh madras shirt.
This page intentionally left blank for viewing facing pages. Please proceed to next page.
HANNA
The Master is dressing. I am to offer you a drink. There is whiskey and there is iced tea.

CLAY
Tea is fine.

He sits at the kitchen table.

HANNA
No. You are a guest now. You go in the living room.

CLAY
That’s okay, Hanna. I’m more comfortable in here. It is Hanna, isn’t it?

She eyes him suspiciously, shrugs, pours a glass of tea. Clay notices a Bible on the counter.

CLAY
How long you worked for Mr. Whale?

HANNA
Long enough. Fifteen years.

CLAY
I bet you’ve seen a lot of famous people come and go? Movie stars?

HANNA
No. We live simply, Mr. Jimmy and I. People come to play bridge. And now and then, young men to swim. You have people, Boone?

CLAY
You mean family? All in Joplin, Missouri.

HANNA
Your wife?

CLAY
I’m not married.

HANNA
Why?

CLAY
Oh, I don’t know. Because no girl in her right mind will have me?
HANNA
A man who is not married has nothing. He is a man of trouble. You need a woman.

CLAY
You proposing what I think you’re proposing? Don’t you think I’m a little young for you?

Hanna twists her head around with such an indignant look that Clay bursts out laughing. She realizes that she is being teased.

HANNA
Men. Always pulling legs. Everything is comedy.
(mimics an English accent)
"How very amusing. How marvelously droll."

Hanna stares at Clay until his smile fades. She resumes her chopping in silence.

CLAY
You ever been married, Hanna?

HANNA
Of course. I am married still.

CLAY
Yeah? What’s your husband do?

HANNA
He is dead now, twenty years.

CLAY
Then you’re as single as I am.

HANNA
No. I have children, grandchildren too. I visit when I can. But now that Mr. Jimmy cannot be left very long, I do not get away much.
(sighs)
Poor Mr. Jimmy. There is much good in him, but he will suffer the fires of hell. Very sad.

CLAY
You’re sure of that?

HANNA
This is what the priests tell me. His sins of the flesh will keep him from heaven.
CLAY
Sins of the flesh? Everybody has those.

HANNA
No. His is the worse.
(whispers)
The unspeakable. The deed no man can name without shame?

She loses patience with Clay's blank look.

HANNA
What is the good English? All I know is bugger. He is a bugger. Men who bugger each other.

A homo?

CLAY

HANNA
Yes! You know?

Clay slowly sits up.

HANNA
That is why he must go to hell. I do not think it fair. But God's law is not for us to judge.

CLAY
You're telling me Mr. Whale is a homo.

HANNA
You did not know?

CLAY
Well...no, not really --

HANNA
You and he are not doing things?

CLAY
No!

HANNA
Good. That is what I hope. I did not think you a bugger too. I fear only that you might hurt him if he tries.

CLAY
I'm not going to hurt anyone.

HANNA
Yes. I trust you.
Off in the distance, a throat loudly trumpets itself clear.

HANNA
You must go in. Quickly. He will not like to think I have had you in the kitchen.

Clay gets up slowly, reluctant to leave the room.

64 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - DAY

Whale comes forward as Clay enters, offering a hand at the end of a spindly wrist.

WHALE
How are you, Mr. Boone? So glad you are free for lunch.

CLAY
All right, I guess.

WHALE
I assume you worked up an appetite with your labor.

A hesitant smile from Clay. Whale picks a stack of mail off the table, rifles through envelopes.

WHALE
Forgive my rudeness. At my age, the post is the cream of the day.

He returns the stack to the table but holds on to a square envelope.

WHALE
Do you mind?

CLAY
Go ahead.

Clay looks off while Whale opens the envelope.

WHALE
Hmmm? Princess Margaret?

He is examining a folded card. He rubs a thumb over the printed lettering.

He holds out an open hand so that Clay can precede him into the dining room.

Hanna sets down two steaming plates of omelettes. Whale hands a glass of red wine to Clay.

CHEERS.

They both take a sip of wine.

Smells lovely, Hanna.

Hanna nods, steals a glance at Clay as she leaves.

Saw your movie the other night. Watched it with some friends.

Did you now?

I liked it. We all did.

No.

WHALE
Pity. People are so earnest nowadays.

CLAY
Why? Was it supposed to be funny?

WHALE
Of course. I had to make it interesting for myself, you see. A comedy about death. The trick is not to ruin it for anyone who isn't in on the joke.
(a sip of wine)
But the Monster never receives any of my gibes. He is noble. Noble and misunderstood.

Whale gazes pointedly at Clay, who eats with his elbows on the table, quickly bolting the hot omelette.

WHALE
In Korea, Mr. Boone?

Clay looks up.

WHALE
Did you kill anyone?  (will yelp)

CLAY
I don't like to talk about that.

WHALE
Nothing to be ashamed of. I gather that killing is an American rite of passage. One's not a real man until one's killed another man.

CLAY
That's horseshit. Any jerk with a gun can kill someone.

WHALE
Quite true. Hand-to-hand combat is the true test. Did you ever slay anyone hand-to-hand?

CLAY  (defensive)
No. I could have, though.

Full up. I got the hedges to do here, then another lawn out by La Cienega.

WHALE
What if we say phooey to the hedges? Could you spare an hour after lunch? To sit for me?

CLAY
Can't today.

WHALE
I'll pay our going rate. Plus what you'd get if you did the hedges.

CLAY
Sorry. I'm not in the mood.

WHALE
I'll pay our going rate. Plus what you'd get if you did the hedges.

CLAY
Sorry. I'm not in the mood.

WHALE
All righty. I understand.

CLAY
May I offer you a cigar?

CLAY
Sure.

WHALE
Just a trim. And mine while you're at it. Fingers are a bit stiff today.

CLAY
You ever been married, Mr. Whale?

WHALE
No. At least not in the legal sense.

CLAY
What other way is there?
Clay hands a clipped cigar back to Whale.

CLAY

So you had a wife?

WHALE

Or a husband. Depending on which of us you asked. My friend David. He lived here for many years.

The other cigar crunches faintly between Clay’s fingers.

WHALE

Does that surprise you?

CLAY

No, I -- you’re a homosexual.

WHALE

Oh dear. If one must have a clinical name.

CLAY

I’m not, you know.

WHALE

I never thought you were.

CLAY

You don’t think of me that way, do you?

WHALE

What way might that be?

CLAY

You know. Look at me like -- like I look at pretty girls. Women.

WHALE

Don’t be ridiculous. I know a real man like you would break my neck if I so much as laid a hand on him. Besides, you’re not my type.

Clay suddenly laughs. Whale’s smile deepens.

WHALE

So we understand each other? (I’m a bottom)

CLAY

What you do is no business of mine. Live and let live, I say.
I hope this has nothing to do with your refusing to sit for me today?

No. I --

Whale continues to smile, slyly.

What are you afraid of, Mr. Boone? Certainly not a frail old man like me.

Clay has no answer. He gives in with a sigh.

Clay sits sideways on the chair again. Whale stands at the easel.

Can I see what you did so far?

It will only make you self-conscious. You'll have to remove your shirt.

Sorry. Not today.

But we need to match the other sketch.

I just feel more comfortable keeping it on. You just said you didn't want me self-conscious.

Whale steps forward.

Perhaps if we open the shirt and pull --

Whale's hands go in. Clay's flesh tightens; he shrinks back. The hands stop, palms raised.

Oh dear. I have made you nervous.

I'm fine. I'd just rather keep it on.
Suppose we unbutton the top and pull it down around your shoulders? Two buttons. Is that so much to ask? Just two little buttons.

Whale’s thumb and fingers unpluck buttons in midair.

No! Look. What you told me at lunch is still very weird for me. So either you sketch me like I am or I’ll say forget it and go do your hedges.

Whale takes a step back. His eyes are locked on Clay, fascinated by his temper.

I don’t mean to be a prick, but that’s how I feel.

Of course. I don’t want to scare you off. Not before I’m finished with you.

Whale glides behind the easel. The pencils rattle in the tray.

Tell me more about yourself, Mr. Boone. You have a steady companion?

Not at the moment.

Why not?

You know how it is. You have to kiss ass just to get a piece of it. Very well put.

The world is just one kiss-ass game after another. A man has to make up his own life, alone.

Ah, a philosopher! Mr. I regular Thoreau with a lawnmower.
(smiles)

Right. I like that.

WHALE

But take care, Mr. Boone. Freedom is a drug, much like any other. Too much can be a very bad thing.

Clay glances out the window. Feigning a merely casual interest:

CLAY

Is that why you and your friend split up? Because you wanted to be free?

WHALE

In a way, yes. I suppose so. I know it's why I stopped making pictures.

WHALE

You might not think it to look at me now, but there was a time when I was at the very pinnacle of my profession. The horror movies were behind me. I'd done "Show Boat." Major success. Great box office. Now I was to do something important. "The Road Back." An indictment of the Great War and what it did to Germany. It was to be my masterpiece.

CLAY

What happened?

WHALE

The fucking studio butchered it. It was 1937, Hitler's armies were already massing -- and still the New York bankers stood in line to curry his favor. Anything to avoid losing the German market. They cut away the guts and brought in another director to add slapstick. The picture laid an egg, a great expensive bomb. For which I was blamed.

A shadow passes over Whale's eyes. He presses two fingers against his temple.
After that, I went out of fashion. I was no longer able to command the best projects, so I walked away. Why should I spend my time working in such a dreadful business?

Do you miss it?

It's so far in the past now. Over fifteen years --

Whale stops himself. He smiles gently at Clay.

Making movies was the most wonderful thing in the world. Working with friends. Entertaining people. Yes, I suppose I miss it. More so now that --

Whale reaches into his pocket, takes out the bottle of Luminal.

I think we all want to feel we've left our mark on the world. Yes. I wish I had done more work.

You've done a helluva lot more than most people.

Better work.

But I chose freedom. David was still in the thick of it, his life full of anxiety and studio intrigue. I didn't fancy spending my golden years as merely "the friend." The dirty little secret of a nervous producer.

How long were you...?
WHALE

Twenty years. Too long. We were like a play whose run outlasted the cast's ability to keep it fresh. So I finally decided to close down the show.

Whale places a pill on his tongue and swallows. He fixes Clay with a pinched smile.

WHALE

When all fetters are loosened, a certain hedonism creeps in, don't you think? There was a period when this house was overrun with young men. Some even posed for me.

Right where you're sitting now.

Clay shifts uncomfortably in his chair. His face flushes.

WHALE

Of course, they weren't nearly as bashful. No, this room was once filled with bare buttocks. And pricks. Hard, arrogant pricks --

Cut it out!

Clay explodes out of his chair, knocking over a small side table.

WHALE

I assure you, Mr. Boone, I meant no --

CLAY

From now on, Mr. Whale, I cut your grass and that's it. Understand?

Before Whale can respond Clay storms out, nearly ripping the screen door off its hinges. Whale sits on the daybed, takes a few quick breaths. Suddenly the air is filled with the sounds of people cavorting in the pool.

WHALE

I think I'll just rest for a moment.

The man shrugs, disappears into the darkness. We move across the room and through the door...
67 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - NIGHT

Whale sits in a director's chair, a martini in one hand, a cigar in the other, a harmless old uncle watching young men swagger and splash in the pool.

WHALE
I think we're ready to go.

He glances over, sees Clay in plaid bathing trunks, sitting apart from the others. He is puffing on a Camel.

WHALE
You're up, Mr. Boone.

Clay ignores him. Whale puts down his martini and cigar, picks up a Polaroid camera. He moves over to Clay.

WHALE
The extras are in their places. Now we need the star. Wouldn't you like to get in the pool?

CLAY
You first.

WHALE
Oh no. I never swim.

Whale removes Clay's cigarette, crushes it with his shoe. Behind him, the pool is now a pit full of naked shadows.

WHALE
You'll have to remove that shirt.

Whale touches Clay's bare chest. Clay grabs hold of his wrist, causing the old man to yelp in pain. In the pool, the extras shriek in alarm.

Clay's hands close tightly around Whale's throat.

68 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - DAY

Whale's hands fly to his throat. He opens his eyes and gasps greedily for air, the young men's screams lingering in the room. There is a look of genuine terror on his face.

69 EXT. BRENTWOOD HOUSE - YARD - DUSK

The sun goes down. Clay wearily pushes his lawnmower, struggling to concentrate on the darkened lawn.

EXT. BRENTWOOD HOUSE - BACK DOOR - NIGHT

The smug PROPERTY OWNER peers out at Clay from behind a screen door.
CLAY
Do you mind turning on a light?
It's getting pretty soupy out here.

OWNER
Should have been here when you said you would. You whack off a toe, don't think about taking me to court.
CLAY
You’re lucky I even squeezed you in today.

OWNER
Don’t take that tone with me, bub. There’s Japs in this town that work cheaper and do flowers too.

Clay takes a deep breath. He can’t afford to get angry.

CLAY
Will you just turn on the porch light? Sir?

The owner flicks on the light.

70 INT. HARRY’S BEACHCOMBER - NIGHT

Clay presses through the Saturday night crowd. He leans in to the bar, calls out to Harry.

CLAY
Harry, gimme a beer.

Harry reaches for a bottle without looking up. Clay cranes his neck to scan the crowd.

CLAY
Where’s Betty?

HARRY
She took the night off. Heavy date. Some guy she’s had her eye on for a while.

Harry smiles pointedly at Clay, hands him the beer.

CLAY
Thanks a lot, pal.

Clay turns his back on the bar. He sees Dwight moving through the crowd.

Dwight!

Dwight nods, a little coolly.

Hey, Boone.

Dwight shrugs, heads toward the door.

Have a drink?

Dwight’s WIFE, a pert, steely-eyed brunette, places a firm hand on his shoulder. Dwight shrugs, heads toward the door.
Clay turns. A pretty, too-tan BLONDE WOMAN in her early 30s is standing at the end of the bar, eyeing Clay. He lifts his glass and she responds with an open smile.

71 EXT. CLAY’S TRAILER - NIGHT

Clay and the woman go at it, their shadows visible through the glass louvers.

72 INT. CLAY’S TRAILER - BATHROOM - NIGHT

Clay tugs on a cord and the harsh overhead fluorescent buzzes to life. He splashes his face with water, then catches his reflection in the mirror.

73 EXT. SANTA MONICA LIBRARY - DAY

Clay parks outside the local branch of the public library.

74 SCENE OMITTED

75 INT. READING ROOM - DAY

Clay leafs through an oversized folio, bound copies of The New York Times. He glances at an article from 1936. "Interview With a Passing Whale." There is a picture of Whale, captioned "Famous British Director." A LIBRARIAN approaches with more leatherbound books.

LIBRARIAN

Here are the trade newspapers you wanted.

Clay takes the books, opens one.

76 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - DAY

Whale eats lunch off a TV tray. His attention remains focused on "Queen for a Day" as Hanna clomps into the room behind him.

WHALE

Who was at the door?

HANNA

A visitor.

Whale turns. His face registers surprise when he sees Clay.

WHALE

Thank you, Hanna. That will be all.

Hanna retreats toward the kitchen. Clay steps tentatively into the room.
Whale holds up two fingers, affects an American accent.

Mr. Boone. You're not due to cut the lawn until Wednesday.

I'd like to sit for you again. But only if you ease up on the locker room talk. Okay?

Whale holds up two fingers, affects an American accent.

WHALE

Clay smiles.

77 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - STUDIO - DAY

Whale and Boone are back in their familiar positions. An empty glass of beer sits on the floor next to Clay.

WHALE

I'm curious, Mr. Boone. What convinced you to come back?

CLAY

I don't know. I guess I like your stories.

WHALE

Everybody has stories to tell.

CLAY

Not me.

WHALE

What about your stint in Korea? I'm sure it was full of dramatic episodes.

CLAY

I told you. I don't like to talk about that.

WHALE

And the fear you showed at our last session? How did you overcome that?

CLAY

Not fear. More like disgust.
WHALE
Same difference, Mr. Boone. Disgust, fear of the unknown -- all part of the great gulf that stands between us. Am I right in assuming that you've had little experience with men of my persuasion?

CLAY
There's no people like you in my crowd.

WHALE
No teammates in football? No comrades in Korea?

CLAY
You must think the whole world is queer. Well it's not. War sure isn't.

WHALE
Oh, there may not be atheists in the foxholes, but there are occasionally lovers.

CLAY
You're talking through your hat now.

WHALE
Not at all. I was in the foxholes myself.

CLAY
You were a soldier?

WHALE
I was an officer.

Clay breaks his pose to turn and look at Whale.

CLAY
This was World War I?

WHALE
No, my dear. The Crimean War. What do you think? The Great War. You had a Good War, while we had -- Whale clears his throat, bored by his standard line.

WHALE
-- a war without end. There were trenches when I arrived, and trenches when I left, two years later. Just like in the movies.

(MORE)
He backed away from 'clay' He isn't noticing 'clay' but continues to stare at 'paper', a saw from pinched under his nose, the pearl brightly in his finger. He holds a "watermill" of 'clay', position, lower himself and sit on edge.
Now he's talking only to himself.

WHALE

Barnett. Was that his name?

Leonard Barnett. He came to the front straight from Harrow. And he looked up to me. Unlike the others, he didn't care that I was a workingman impersonating his betters. How strange, to be admired so blindly. I suppose he loved me. But chastely, like a schoolboy.

CLAY

Something happened to him?

WHALE

I remember one morning in particular. A morning when the sun came out.

78 EXT. TRENCHES - DAY (1917)

LEONARD BARNETT, 19, boyish and handsome, peers into a periscope. Whale stands beside him, pointing out landmarks on the bleak landscape.

WHALE (V.O.)

Odd, how even there one could have days when the weather was enough to make one happy. He and I were standing on the fire step and I showed him the sights of no-man's land, through the periscope. It was beautiful. The barbed wire was reddish gold, the water in the shell holes green with algae, the sky a clear quattrocento blue. And I stood shoulder to shoulder with a tall apple-cheeked boy who loved and trusted me.

WHALE reaches over and lays his arm across Barnett's shoulder. Barnett smiles timidly at him. We CUT TO:
Whale leans forward, completely disoriented. His eyes fix on Clay, the white eyebrows screwed down, until he is able to recognize the face.

WHALE

Don't do this to me again, Mr. Boone. I absolutely refuse.

Whale stands, his legs shaky.

WHALE

You will not set me on another walk down memory lane. Not this lane. Not today.

CLAY

I didn't --

WHALE

Why do I tell you this? I never told David. I never even remembered it until you got me going.

CLAY

You're the one who started in.

WHALE

You're very clever, Mr. Boone. You just sit there and let me talk. What a sorry old man, you're thinking. What a crazy old fool.

(comes closer)

Why are you here? What do you want from me?

CLAY

You asked me to model. Remember?

WHALE

Of course I remember. Do you think I'm so senile --

Whale stands over Clay. His pale face turns left, right, looking at Clay with one cold eye, then the other. Clay returns the gaze, worried for Whale.

CLAY

Mr. Whale? Are you okay?

WHALE

You're not an angry lion at all.

CLAY

What?
WHALE

No. You're just a puzzled house cat.

CLAY

What are you talking about?

Whale turns away. He yanks out a handkerchief.

WHALE

Stupid. Very stupid. What have I been thinking?

He sits on the daybed and bends over, covering both eyes with the handkerchief.

CLAY

I don't get it. First you creep me out with homo shit. Then you hit me with war stories. And now you're upset because I listen? What do you want?

WHALE

I want -- I want...

His pained eyes focus on Clay, and soften.

WHALE

I want a glass of water.

Clay gets up and goes to the sink.

WHALE

A touch of headache.

Clay hands him the water.

Thank you.

WHALE

My apologies. I had no business snapping at you.

WHALE

No harm done.

CLAY
Whale shakes his head sadly. He gazes up at Clay, sees the disappointment on his face.

WHALE
It was foolishness to attempt this portrait. You cannot force what will not flow.

CLAY
You don’t want me to sit for you anymore?

WHALE
How would you like to come to a party with me? A reception for Princess Margaret.

CLAY
I thought you weren’t going.

WHALE
If you don’t mind driving, I’d like to take you as my guest. There should be lots of pretty starlets to keep you amused.

CLAY
I’m game. Sure.

WHALE
Very good, Clayton. May I call you Clayton? Or do you prefer Boone?

CLAY
Clayton is fine.

WHALE
Clayton is fine.

EXT. OCEAN PROMENADE - DUSK
The sun is setting over the Pacific. Clay stands in a phone booth on the strand.

INT. PHONE BOOTH - DUSK
Clay smiles anxiously as the call connects.

CLAY
Mom? Yeah, it’s me.

Clay pauses as his mother shoots questions at him.

CLAY
No, I’m not in jail...I don’t want any money, no... (louder, to be heard) Look, is Sis there? I want to tell (MORE)
We hear the phrase: "She's out, Clay." Clay closes his eyes as his mother rambles on.

CLAY

No, I still...I'd give you my phone number if I had a phone --

Clay tries to stay calm as his mother berates him for not staying in touch.

CLAY

How's the old man?

Before Clay can protest we hear: "Hold on." Clay glances out at couples strolling up the promenade. An operator interrupts, says: "One dollar for the next three minutes." Clay deposits two quarters before his mother returns. "He's busy, Clay."

CLAY

Right.

The operator comes on again, asking for fifty more cents. Clay stares at the quarters in his hand.

CLAY

Time's up. I better go.

Clay listens as his mother prattles on, until the connection is broken and the phone goes dead. Clay steps out of the booth, takes a deep breath of ocean air.

81 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - DAY

Whale and Hanna go through the closet together.

HANNA

Mr. Boone. He is an interesting friend.

WHALE

I'd hardly call our yardman a friend.

HANNA

No. But someone you can talk to.

Whale stops, turns to Hanna.

WHALE

Do you miss having someone to talk to, Hanna?
HANNA
I have my family. Also our Lord Jesus Christ.

WHALE
Of course. How is the old boy these days?

The naughty remark is met with a solemn stare. Whale reaches up, chooses a lightweight blue suit.

WHALE
It needs a hat. There was a wide-brimmed cream fedora...

HANNA
It must be up in your old room. I will look.

The phone rings. Hanna hurries to answer it.

82 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - MAIN HALL - DAY
Hanna speaks softly in Hungarian. Whale points upstairs to let her know he will look for the hat himself.

83 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - MASTER BEDROOM - DAY
Whale opens the closet door and takes down a stack of hatboxes from the overhead shelf. He opens the first box, takes out a rubbery wad of heavy fabric with two round windows like eyes. It’s a gas mask. We CUT TO:

84 INT. TRENCHES - NIGHT (1917)
The night sky explodes with light and smoke. Whale moves calmly through the chaos, trying to maintain a modicum of order among the troops.

WHALE
Gas masks on. Gas masks on.

At the end of the line, young Barnett is struggling with his straps. Mustard gas is starting to stream into the trench.

BARNETT
Don’t mind me, Lieutenant. Save yourself.

Whale slips the mask over Barnett’s face, fastens it. He slides his own mask into position moments before the trench is obliterated by the yellowish smoke. We CUT TO:

85 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - MASTER BEDROOM - DAY
Hanna stands in the door with a forlorn frown.
HANNA
Oh, Mr. Jimmy. You make a mess of it. Here.

Hanna lifts the lid of an unopened box to show him the missing fedora.

HANNA
(stacking boxes)
That is my daughter. She say she and her husband are coming to town this afternoon. I am sorry, Mr. Jimmy. I will make it short.

WHALE
I’ll be out this afternoon, remember? Your family can visit as long as they like.

HANNA
No. I do not cook for them. My daughter’s no-good husband will not take one bite of our food.

Hanna holds out the box for the gas mask. Whale gives it a long, final look, then drops it in the box.

WHALE
You can toss this one in the trash.

Hanna clamps the lid on the box.

86 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - FOYER - DAY
Hanna has opened the door. At the end of the hall, silhouetted against the bright afternoon sky, is Clay. His shoulders fill the doorway. The top of his head is perfectly flat.

WHALE
Good afternoon, Clayton.

CLAY
Do I look okay?

Clay steps into the light. His khaki pants are clean and pressed. A blue knit shirt fits his muscles snugly.

WHALE
You look splendid, my boy. Quite splendid.

87 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - GARAGE - DAY
Whale crosses to the passenger side of the Chrysler.

WHALE
I suppose you’d like the top down.

This is a scan of handwritten text. The text appears to be a personal note or letter, possibly discussing personal experiences or thoughts. The handwriting is in cursive, making it difficult to transcribe accurately. The content seems to be informal and personal in nature, potentially containing thoughts or reflections on personal matters.
If that's okay?

WHALE

Nothing would please me more.

Clay squeezes behind the wheel, shifts the seat back, explores switches. The vinyl top pops up and folds backward.

WHALE gets in. Clay starts the engine and backs out.

88 EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - DAY

Hanna stands at the front door, hands tangled in her apron. Whale tugs his hat brim at her as the car swings around the driveway.

WHALE smiles at the wide open sky overhead. Clay steps on the gas and the Chrysler takes off.

89 EXT. CUKOR HOUSE - DAY

The party is clearly audible from the road, where Clay has squeezed the Chrysler into a long row of shiny cars nuzzling the high brick wall. Whale puts his dark glasses on.

WHALE

Stars, you know. The suns of other galaxies.

They walk up the steep road to the gatehouse.

WHALE

Good old George. He loves to put on the dog. Only his dogs tend to have a bit of mutt.

A WOMAN at the gate inspects the invitation, waves them through.

90 EXT. CUKOR HOUSE - LAWN - DAY

A sunny patio with hedges and statues. Wickets and stakes have been set up for a game of croquet, but only a handful of very tanned children strut around with mallets.

WHALE

What did I tell you? Listen.

CLAY

I don't hear anything.

WHALE

Exactly. Cukor was too cheap to hire music. There's nothing but chin-wag. The cold dreary custard of English chin-wag.
She seizes Whale’s hand.

Standing beside him, Clay knows a princess.

Whale scans the crowd.

WHALE

Slim pickings. Well, it’s early yet. Perhaps this is a good time to pay our respects.

Clay follows Whale toward a trellis alcove covered in ivy. A handful of people grin at the mismatched couple who stand in the shade: a homely older man in glasses and a pretty woman in a white dress with polka dots. GEORGE CUKOR and PRINCESS MARGARET, at age 27.

WHALE

Let’s get this over with quickly.

Whale forgets to remove his hat when he comes forward. Before he can give Cukor their names Princess Margaret’s polite smile bursts open in a joyful display of teeth.

PRINCESS MARGARET

I had no idea you’d be here.

She seizes Whale’s hand in her little white gloves.

How are you?

PRINCESS MARGARET

WHALE

(taken aback)

Fine. Quite fine. And Your Royal Highness?

PRINCESS MARGARET

Splendid. Now that I know you’re around.

Standing beside him, Clay is clearly impressed that Whale knows a princess.

PRINCESS MARGARET

Can we get together while I’m in town? I so badly want to sit for you again.

WHALE

Sit?

PRINCESS MARGARET

I’ve changed my hair, you see. Since our last session. Those old snaps look rather dowdy now.

Whale realizes she’s mistaken him for someone else. He tugs his sunglasses down his nose so she can see his eyes.

PRINCESS MARGARET

Oh dear. Have I made a blunder?
WHALE
Ma'am, the pleasure is mine. James Whale.

PRINCESS MARGARET
(laughs)
I am such a goose. I mistook you for Cecil Beaton. It's the hat. You're wearing one of Cecil's hats, you know.

Whale attempts to chuckle while he fights a feeling of humiliation. He turns to Cukor for help.

WHALE
Hello, George. James Whale. David Lewis's friend. I once made pictures myself, Ma'am.

GEORGE CUKOR
Yes. Of course. One can't throw a rock in this town without hitting one of us old movie directors.

Whale feels the sting. He turns to Clay.

WHALE
Ma'am, may I present Mr. Clayton Boone?

Clay steps forward to shake hands.

WHALE
My gardener, who insisted I bring him today. He so wanted to meet royalty.

Cukor's face goes blank with indignation.

CLAY
Pleased to meet you.

PRINCESS MARGARET
Quite. I adore gardens.

Whale narrows his eyes at Cukor and sharpens his smile.

WHALE
He's never met a princess. Only queens.

Cukor puffs out his chest, quivers a bulbous lower lip at Whale.
Lehrer: ne alschulrg ruyg using asngt boro to ericinr bker.

[Note: The handwriting is unclear and difficult to transcribe accurately.]
George, Ma'am, this has been an honor. An occasion to remember for the rest of my days.

He leads Clay away and an American couple promptly crowd in to take their place. Striding through the garden, Whale is obviously pleased with himself.

What was that about?

Nothing of importance. Just two old men slapping each other with lilies. Shall we have a drink?

Whale leads Clay to a tented bar. Across the way, David Lewis has come through the gate with a WOMAN on his arm. People look discreetly, not at David but at the woman, lightly veiled in a scarf and sunglasses.

Who's that?

David. The friend I thought was in New York.

No. The girl.

Girl? Oh. Elizabeth Taylor.

Clay watches in amazement as ELIZABETH TAYLOR waves to someone and pipes out a happy hello. She hurriedly unties her scarf, thrusts it at David and runs off on tiptoes to embrace a woman.

Is that really her?

David produced her last picture.

David glances around while he slips the scarf into a coat pocket. He sees Whale looking at him. He puts on a tight smile and strolls across the patio.

What are you doing here?
We tell me I have arthritis but he has had it longer than I think.
He hurries off.

(WHALE)

Just what I was about to ask you. I thought you were in New York.

(DAVID)

I was, until last night. Publicity asked me to fly Miss Taylor in for today’s reception.

The waiter arrives with their drinks. Only when Clay takes his glass of beer does David see that Whale is not alone. He holds out his hand.

(DAVID)

David Lewis.

(CLAY)

Clay Boone.

(WHALE)

Our yardman. Who was kind enough to serve as my escort to George’s little do.

David freezes. Whale lifts his martini glass at Clay and takes a sip.

(DAVID)

Should you be drinking in your condition?

(WHALE)

Oh, David, stop being a nanny.

Clay clears his throat, eager to escape this domestic squabble.

(CLAY)

I think I’ll go look at Elizabeth Taylor.

He hurries off.

(WHALE)

You should have seen Georgie’s face when he met Clayton.

(DAVID)

You didn’t, Jimmy.

(WHALE)

I did. But Princess Margaret was a doll. We’re all equals in her eyes. As commoners, I presume.

(DAVID)

You only embarrass yourself.
He said me "mystery, surprise, and mapped brisk."

He asked me "and mark in 'histor".

Not inspired by anger - darren am glasses.
WHALE

Oh dear. I'll never work in this town again?

DAVID

You know what I mean. Your reputation.

WHALE

But I have no reputation. I'm as free as the air.

DAVID

Well the rest of us aren't. Can't you remember that?

WHALE

No. I never could. You must regret having had the invitation sent.

David is looking over Whale's shoulder.

DAVID

I didn't ask George to invite you.

Then who did?

WHALE

Jimmy, there are people here I need to speak to. You'll be fine on your own?

Yes. Perfectly.

WHALE

All right, then. I'll come by tomorrow for breakfast.

Whale nods, watches David stroll over to the pool and greet a gaggle of executives. Whale drifts toward some deck chairs at the far end of the croquet lawn. He sits, takes a sip of his drink. Suddenly a high-pitched giggle pierces the air.

KAY

Mr. Whale!

Whale looks out to see Edmund Kay, his interviewer from several weeks ago, marching across the lawn.

Mr....Kay?

WHALE
Bet you thought you'd never see me again. I didn't know if you'd be well enough to come to this party.

You didn't?

I'm the one who got you on Mr. Cukor's guest list.

You, Mr. Kay? How do you know George Cukor?

I interviewed him after I met you. I'm his social secretary now. Well, assistant to his secretary.

I commend you. If you're going to pursue poofs, go after those who can do favors for you. You waste everybody's time when you court dinosaurs.

Don't think that, Mr. Whale. I love your movies. That's why I wanted you to come to this. So I could see you with your monsters.

My monsters?

Don't go away.

Whale tries to do just that, but finds himself caught in the chair. He is stumbling to his feet when Kay returns with Elsa Lanchester, 55, at his side.

Jimmy. How are you?

Elsa?

She takes Whale's hand, with a look of deep concern and sympathy. Kay races off again.

I saw Una O'Connor a few weeks ago. She said you'd been under the weather.

WHALE
Oh, nothing out of the ordinary.
Growing old.

ELSA LANCHESTER
We're all getting a bit long in the tooth.

WHALE (lit. wisht)
But you appear quite fresh, my dear.

She swats aside the compliment and gestures at the chair.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Please. You shouldn't stand on my account.

WHALE
Perfectly all right. But if you'd like to sit --

ELSA LANCHESTER
I'm fine, Jimmy. I can only stay a few minutes.

WHALE (lit. in need, a name call an invtel)
Of course.

ELSA LANCHESTER
What's our pesky friend up to now?

Kay returns, accompanied by a stooped, gray-haired man with a long rectangular face and wary, heavy-lidded eyes.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Is that Boris? Our little chum appears to be arranging a reunion.

WHALE
Oh dear.

Karloff, age 70, comes reluctantly, followed by his niece ALICE, a bashful young woman who carries a blanket-wrapped bundle.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Boris, darling. I didn't know you were here. These public revels are hardly up your alley.

BORIS KARLOFF
I came for the sake of my visiting niece. Alice. And Miranda, my great-niece.

His huge hand lifts the blanket in Alice's arms, revealing a bald infant with enormous blue eyes. Karloff gurgles and coos at the child.

ELSA LANCHESTER
And what do you make of our royal visitant?

BORIS KARLOFF
Perfectly charming. A real lady.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Of course she's a lady. What did you expect? A hussy in tennis shoes?

Whale looks up and discovers Clay standing a few feet behind Karloff. He is ogling two bosomy actresses who are listening intently to the monocled British consul.

Whale’s eyes try to focus Karloff and Clay together, his once and future monsters. Kay shouts to a passing photographer carrying a bulky Speed Graphic.

KAY
Hey, you! With the camera! We got a historical moment here. Come get a picture of it.

The man scans the group for a famous face.

KAY
This is Mr. James Whale, who made "Frankenstein" and "Bride of Frankenstein." And this is the Monster and his Bride.

Clay looks up when he hears Kay identify Karloff.

PHOTOGRAPHER
Oh, Karloff. Right.

Karloff and Elsa drift into position next to Whale. The flash goes off, a snap and a crunch of light. Whale cringes in pain.

ELSA LANCHESTER
(through clenched grin)
Don't you just love being famous?

Another flash. From Whale's perspective, the bulb resembles nothing so much as the translucent tube of electrical current from Dr. Frankenstein's laboratory. Whale concentrates on his smile as another snap of light stabs his brain. He clutches Elsa Lanchester's hand.

ELSA LANCHESTER
Are you all right, Jimmy?
A sharp nod from Whale. The photographer motions to Karloff's niece.
PHOTOGRAPHER
Let me get one with Frankenstein holding the kid.

Alice hands over the baby. Karloff gently cradles the child. Whale stands on his left, Elsa on his right. They all smile at the baby, who gurgles and points up. Whale follows the baby's gaze to the sky, where a large kite rocks and strains in a furious electrical storm.

The camera flashes once, then again.

PHOTOGRAPHER
Got it!

Whale glances up -- the kite is gone. Thunder rumbles as the group starts to disperse. Whale nods to the faces exchanging good-byes.

BORIS KARLOFF
So good to see you again, James.

He strolls off, clucking and cooing at his baby.

KAY
Catch you before you go, Mr. Whale. I'll make sure everybody gets sent a print.

He goes off with the photographer. Elsa kisses Whale on the cheek.

ELSA LANCHESTER
We'll be in touch, Jimmy.

WHALE
Good-bye. So nice to see you...

Finally Whale is alone. He staggers to the deck chair and lowers himself sideways into the hammock. Clay

CLAY
You okay?

Whale gazes up at Clay.

WHALE
Tired. A bit tired.

Clay nods. Whale smiles at him.

WHALE
Are you enjoying yourself?

CLAY
Actually, I feel a little out of place.
WHALE
Neither of us really belongs here.

CLAY
Must have been funny for you.
Seeing your monsters again.

WHALE
Monsters? The only monsters...
(closes his eyes)
...are here.

Across the lawn, conversation has stopped. Birdlike shrieks come from all directions.

CLAY
Oh fuck. And we left the top down.
You want to run for it?

Run for what?

CLAY
Can’t you see? It’s raining!

The rain is only a flickering of air, but people are jumping and shrieking, throwing coats over their heads as they dash toward the house.

CLAY
Here.

He takes Whale under the arm, helps him up and escorts him to a small tent. On the patio, everyone shoves and squeezes to get through the one open door.

Whale stares out, hypnotized by the deluge. From his POV, we see a young man step into the rain. Whale squints, is finally able to identify the man as Leonard Barnett.

Whale’s eyes follow Barnett as he emerges onto a new landscape, a scarred and barren battlefield. As the storm continues to rage:

Mr. Whale?

CLAY (O.S.)

WHALE (hesitates)

Let’s get out of this funk hole.

CLAY
You don’t want to wait it out?
Rain should let up soon.
WHALE

We're not sugar. We won't melt.

Whale adjusts the brim of his hat and steps into the downpour. Clay has no choice except to follow. They walk briskly, the minute splashes on Whale's hat forming a ghostly aura of spray.
91 INT. CAR - DAY

Whale opens the door and climbs in next to Clay. The roof slowly closes over them.

CLAY
I better get you home before you catch your death from pneumonia.

WHALE
Catch my death.

Clay glances over, sees Whale sitting very wet and rigid, staring straight ahead.

CLAY
You all right, Mr. Whale?

Whale blinks, slowly turns. There is a cracked look in his eyes.

WHALE
Jimmy. Please. Call me Jimmy.

Clay smiles, starts to back the car out.

92 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - FOYER - DUSK

The hallway is pitch-dark as Whale and Clay enter.

WHALE
Hanna! Bring us some towels. We’re drenched to the bone!

No response.

WHALE
Blast her. If we soil her holy floor, it’s her own damn fault.

WHALE
Whale goes squashing down the hall. Clay remains just inside the open door, prying off his shoes and peeling off his socks. He follows Whale into:

93 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - KITCHEN - DUSK

Whale stands over the table with his jaw open.

WHALE
I don’t believe this.

He slides a note to Clay.

WHALE
It’s not like her.
CLAY
(reading)
Just a night out. Sounds like she can't say no to her daughter.

WHALE (a kind look)
Certainly you have better things to do than babysit an old man?

CLAY
I didn't have anything planned.

WHALE
Good. Let's get dry.

94 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT
Whale stands just inside the closet, buttoning a crisp white shirt. He reaches for a red bow tie, closes the closet door. In the mirror, Leonard Barnett stands behind him, in uniform. Whale's eyes twinkle in surprise. He drapes the tie around his collar.

WHALE
What do you think?

Barnett smiles his approval.

95 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - UPSTAIRS BATHROOM - NIGHT
Clay steps out of the shower, dries himself with a large towel. He wraps the towel around his waist, knots it.

96 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT
Whale opens his desk drawer, takes out a sheaf of paper. He sits, reaches for a pen.

97 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - UPSTAIRS HALLWAY - NIGHT
Clay opens the bathroom door, calls out.

CLAY
Mr. Whale?

No answer. He goes to the top of the stairs and calls out.

CLAY
Where's those clothes you promised?

Again, nothing. Rain ticks against the windows. Clay goes down the stairs.

98 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

WHALE (holding onto his tie)
WHALE is bent over the desk. He looks up.
WHALE

He trusts me, you know.

Barnett sits on the edge of the bed now. He smiles, a bit sadly. Whale returns to his note.

99 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - DOWNSTAIRS HALLWAY - NIGHT

There’s a glow coming from the bedroom, and the sound of Whale’s voice.

CLAY

Mr. Whale? Jimmy?

Clay steps slowly toward the door, pushes it open. He peers in.

100 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

Whale is still writing.

CLAY

Mr. Whale?

Whale jumps. He slaps a hand over his chest, twists around, sees Clay.

WHALE

Oh, of course. Clayton. You finished your shower already?

CLAY

Ten minutes ago. Didn’t you hear me calling?

WHALE

I sat down to dash off this note. Terribly sorry.
(stands)
I believe I promised you some clothes.

Whale crosses to the closet. Barnett is nowhere to be seen.

WHALE

You’re much wider than I am. You won’t want to attempt to get into my pants.

CLAY

No. Definitely not.

Clay chuckles. Whale smiles.

WHALE

Very good, Clayton.
This page intentionally left blank for viewing facing pages. Please proceed to next page.
He takes a robe from a hook on the closet door. Clay tries it on but it won't close over the towel.

WHALE

I know.

Whale opens a drawer, takes out a crewneck sweater.

WHALE

Absolutely swims on me, but should take care of your upper half.

Clay pulls the sweater over his head.

WHALE

That only leaves the rest.

CLAY

You don't have any baggy shorts? Pajama bottoms?

WHALE

Sorry. My pajamas are tailored. Would it be too distressing to continue with the towel? No more immodest than a kilt, you know.

CLAY

Do I have any other choice?

WHALE

Very sporting of you, Clayton.

Clay notices a framed drawing on the desk.

CLAY

Is that --?

WHALE

(nods)

The only memento I ever kept. My original sketch for the Monster.

He hands the sketch to Clay, who stares down at the famous flat head, hooded eyes, bolted neck of the Monster.

WHALE

Shall we?

Clay puts down the sketch, starts into the hall. Whale turns back, sees Barnett standing by the window. Whale flips off the light and closes the door.

Clay sits at the kitchen table. Whale opens the refrigerator and brings out two plates wrapped in wax paper, and a bottle of beer for Clay. He pours himself a shot of Scotch from a decanter and sits down.

WHALE
After dinner, if Hanna isn’t back? Can we try a few more sketches?

CLAY
I thought you’d given up on my picture.

WHALE
I’d like to try again. If you’re game.

CLAY
Why not? Give us something to do while we wait.

Clay munches on his sandwich. Whale pours himself another Scotch, takes a sip.

WHALE
Tell me something, Clayton. Do you believe in mercy killing?

CLAY
Never gave it much thought.

WHALE
Come now. I’m sure you came across such situations in Korea. A wounded comrade, or perhaps one of the enemy? Someone for whom death would be a blessing.

Clay stops chewing. He stares down at his plate.

CLAY
I never went.

He takes a deep breath, looks up at Whale.

CLAY
I never made it to Korea.

But you said --

WHALE

CLAY
-- that I was a Marine. Which is true. You filled in the rest.

I see.

Clay downs his beer, refills the glass.
CLAY
My old man was a Marine. He enlisted the day he turned seventeen.

WHALE (nervously)

The Great War?

(nods)
By the time he was ready to ship out, the fighting was over. He missed out.

WHALE
A very lucky thing indeed.

CLAY
That's not the way he saw it. To him, it was like his life never got started. Nothing else really mattered. Definitely not his family.

Whale gazes sympathetically at Clay.

CLAY
The morning after Pearl Harbor, he drove down to St. Louis to reenlist. He was so damn excited. World War II was going to be his second chance.

(sighs)
They told him he was too old... nearsighted. Said he'd be more use to his country if he stayed home and looked after his family.

WHALE
Is that why you joined the Marines? For your father's sake?

CLAY
I figured he'd think, you know -- it was the next best thing. Hey, I loved it too. A chance to be a part of something important. Something bigger than yourself.

WHALE
What happened?

CLAY
I didn't have the guts for it.

A look of surprise crosses Whale's face.
He breaks into a crooked smile.

CLAY

You know what he did when I called him? He laughed. He laughed so hard he burst a blood vessel. Said it was a good lesson for me. Not to try to fill his shoes.

WHALE

I'm very sorry.

CLAY

Them's the breaks, right? No war stories for this pup.

WHALE

That's where you're wrong, Clayton. You've just told one. A very good story indeed.

Whale lifts his glass in a toast. Clay empties his glass of beer. He motions toward the decanter.

CLAY

Do you mind?

WHALE

Not at all.

He hands the decanter to Clay.

Clay sits in a straight-backed chair, smoking a cigarette and sipping his Scotch. Whale sketches from a wing chair across the room.

CLAY

Storm's getting worse.

WHALE

"A perfect night for mystery and horror. The air itself is filled with monsters."

CLAY

That's from your movie, right?

WHALE

Very good.
CLAY
"The only monsters are here."

WHALE
I don't remember that one. [shrug]

CLAY
James Whale. This afternoon at the party.

Whale looks up.

CLAY
I said it must be weird seeing your monsters again, and you said, "The only monsters are here." I was wondering which here you meant.

WHALE
I don't recall. Memories of the war, perhaps.

CLAY
But that was so long ago. It can't still bother you.

WHALE
Oh, but it does. Especially in light of the journey I'm about to make.

CLAY
You're planning a trip?

Whale's gaze remains dreamy and preoccupied as SOUNDS of battle fill the room. A relentless rat-a-tat of gunfire. The whistling of bombs. The tortured wailing of dying men. Whale stands, moves over to the window.

WHALE
Brains caught his between the eyes. Very neat. A good morning's work for some proficient sniper. Poor Sergeant Morgan was less lucky. He was tactfully correcting my attitude toward the other Ranks. And bang! A chunk of shrapnel cut through his helmet. His skull burst open, spraying me with brains. Wet and meaty, like warm oatmeal. The very brains that enabled him to be so tactful. [a deep sigh]

And Barnett. Poor Barnett on the wire.
Here's one of
"As sharp as a butter knife."
CLAY

Your friend?

Whale gazes out at the storm. From his POV, we see a scarred and barren landscape, illuminated by occasional flashes of lightning.

WHALE

He caught his one night coming back from the reconnoiter. I wouldn't take him out, but McGill did. Just to give the lad a taste. They were nearly home when a Maxim gun opened fire.

103 EXT. TRENCHES - NIGHT (1917)

We race along the open trench with Whale, the darkened sky intermittently punctured by bursts of gunfire. He reaches the periscope, pulls an enlisted man off it. From his POV, we see Barnett and McGill dodging bullets as they attempt to make their way back.

WHALE

(through clenched teeth)

Come on. Come on.

McGill leaps over the barbed wire of a forward trench. Barnett follows. Just as his feet leave the ground his chest is riddled by a fresh round of gunfire. Whale's eyes snap closed, trying to obliterate what they've just seen.

WHALE (V.O.)

Barnett's body fell in wire as thick as briars. It was hanging there the next morning, a hundred yards from the line, too far out for anyone to fetch it.

104 INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

Whale stares out impassively.

WHALE

They began a new bombardment that night, so we had to leave him on the wire. We saw him at morning stand-to and evening stand-to. "Good morning, Barnett," we'd say each day. "How's ole Barnett looking this morning?" "Seems a little peaky. Looks a little plumper." His wounds faced the other way and his hat shielded his eyes, so one could imagine he was napping on bedsprings. He hung there until we were relieved. We introduced him to the new unit before we marched out, speaking highly of his companionship.

(MORE)
WHALE (cont’d)

Clay’s eyes are filled with pity.

WHALE

Oh, but we were a witty lot.
Laughing at our dead. Telling ourselves it was our death too.
But with each man who died, I thought, “Better you than me, poor sod.” Because my grief was stronger than any grief.

(bitterly)
A whole generation was wiped out by that war. Millions and millions of young men.

Whale begins to hum, a tune we have heard before:

WHALE

Oh death where is thy sting-a-ling?
Grave where thy victory?

CLAY

You survived it. It can’t hurt you now. It’s no good to dig it up.

WHALE

Oh no, my friend. It’s digging itself up. There is nothing in the here and now to take my mind off
it. All my diversions have abandoned me. Parties. Reading.
Painting. Work. Love. All gone to me now—

Whale remains perfectly still, staring out the window. Clay deliberates a moment, then puts down his drink next to the decanter of Scotch. He stands and yanks the neck of the sweater over his face, then tosses it on the sofa. Whale blinks at the reflection in the glass, not yet understanding.

CLAY

You wanted to draw me like a Greek statue. All right, then.

Clay pulls at the knot, lets go of the towel. He defiantly parks his hands on his hips.

CLAY

There. Not so bad.

WHALE continues to stare at the reflection, his back to Clay, his eyes wide and expressionless.
He turns slowly, fully expecting the vision to evaporate. When he sees that Clay is truly naked he mutters softly under his breath.

WHALE
So it is going to happen after all.

CLAY
What'd you say?

WHALE doesn’t respond. Finally he opens his mouth to take a breath.

No. It won’t do.

CLAY
What won’t do?

WHALE
You are much too human.

CLAY
What did you expect? Bronze?

WHALE
Don’t move.

WHALE moves abruptly across the room. He walks past Clay.

INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - DINING ROOM - NIGHT

WHALE passes quickly through the dining room and out to the kitchen.

105 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - GARAGE - NIGHT

WHALE reaches for the hatbox, which sits on top of a garbage can. Suddenly a large hand appears on the box. Whale gasps when a flash of lightning reveals the face of the Monster.

The Monster growls out an inarticulate greeting. He picks up the box and hands it to Whale.

106 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

WHALE removes the lid, sets the hatbox on the sofa.

WHALE
I would like you to wear this.

WHALE steps back. Clay takes the box and covers his lap with it. He lifts out the gas mask.

CLAY
Why?
For the artistic effect. The combination of your human body and that inhuman mask. It's quite striking.

CLAY

I don't know.

WHALE

Please, Clayton. Just for a minute. Long enough for me to see the effect.

CLAY

It's from the first World War, right?

(nods)

WHALE

There are straps in back.

Clay fits the mask on the top of his head and draws it down. The living room turns brownish yellow in the thick glass goggles.

WHALE

Let me help you.

Whale is suddenly behind him. Clay's vision is enclosed in two round windows, so he can't see Whale buckling the second strap.

CLAY

Now what?

Mouth muffled by the inhalator, Clay hears his voice from inside his head. Whale comes around to stand in front of him. He grins as he steps back to examine Clay. Clay nervously taps his knees with his hands.

CLAY

All right. Let's take it off now.

What was that?

WHALE (keeps his grin)

It's too tight.

CLAY

Clay raises his voice to make himself heard. He reaches back to undo the buckles.

WHALE

Allow me.

Whale steps in past the goggles.
Whale drops his hands so Whale can undo the buckles. But nothing happens. Clay turns left and right.

Whale's hands squeeze. Clay grabs the frame of his seat, to stop his arms from automatically swinging a fist. Whale's hand slides over Clay's shoulder to his arm, caressing the tattoo. Clay jerks his shoulder to shake Whale off.

Just take off the fucking mask!

Relax, Clayton. I can't hear you. I can't hear a word.

Whale presses his lips to Clay's tattoo. Clay's muscles tense from head to toe.

What a solid brute you are.

What steely muscles, Clayton.

No? Maybe this, then?

The hand slides over Clay's stomach toward his lap. The tattooed arm swings backward, slamming an elbow against Whale's skull. Clay jumps from the chair, knocking into an end table. The glass and crystal decanter fall to the floor. The lamp spills over and the room goes dark.

Clay's ankle is caught by the sofa leg and he hits the floor, jamming the inhalator against his mouth. He quickly gets up, on his knees and elbows, pulling at the mask. Flashes of lightning strobe the room as Whale collapses over Clay's back and holds on.

Oh yes! I have you now.

A strap breaks. Clay rips the mask off.

Get the fuck off!

Whale's hand squeezes between Clay's legs.
Dear Dr. Halsey,

I wanted to reach out to you again. I understand the complexity of the issues at hand, and I want to assure you that I am committed to finding a solution.

As you know, we have been working on this for several weeks now. I believe that the recent meeting was a positive step forward. However, I do think that we need to approach this from a different angle. I propose that we meet with the key stakeholders in the coming days to discuss the options available.

I believe that if we can get everyone on the same page, we can find a way forward. It is essential that we work together to address this issue.

I appreciate your attention to this matter, and I look forward to hearing your thoughts.

Sincerely,

[Signature]
WHALE
What will you do to get yourself back?

Clay jabs with his elbow, flipping Whale on his back. His body straddles Whale's and pins him, face to face.

CLAY
I'm not that way. Get it through your fucking head. I don't want to mess with you.

WHALE
Oh, but you feel good, Clayton.

His hands clasp Clay's hips. Clay's fist opens as it comes down; he slaps Whale across the face.

WHALE
That didn't even sting. (You're not such a real man after all. Are you?)

Clay whacks Whale's face again.

WHALE
Wait until I tell my friends I had you naked in my arms. Won't they be surprised?

CLAY
I haven't done a damn thing with you!

WHALE (breathless and quaking)
Oh, but you have. You undressed for me. I kissed you. I even touched your prick. How will you be able to live with yourself?

Clay snatches Whale's wrist before it can touch his crotch. With his other hand he picks up the heavy crystal decanter.

CLAY
What the hell do you want from me?!

WHALE (literally on his knees)
I want you to kill me.

Clay freezes. He stares down at the old man with white hair and wild eyes lying beneath him.
Don't want you to kill me. Break my neck or strangle me. It would be so easy to choose her life out of me. Please Clayton don't come back for.

Gently I'm losing my mind every day another piece goes. Soon there will be nothing left.

No I don't want to die alone. Just to be killed by you - that would make death bearable.
CLAY

WHALE

Break my neck. Or strangle me. It would be oh so easy to wrap your hands around my neck and choke the life out of me. Please, Clayton. We've come this far.

You're crazy.

WHALE

Exactly, I'm losing my mind. Every day, another piece goes. Soon there will be nothing left. Look at the sketch I made of you.

Clay turns to the sketch pad, which lies on the floor next to Whale. The page is filled with nothing but doodles and scrawls.

CLAY

Look, if you want to die do it yourself!

WHALE

No, I don't want to die alone. But to be killed by you -- that would make death bearable. They say you never see the one with your name on it. But, I want to see death coming at me. I want it to be sharp and hard, with a human face. Your face. Think, Clayton. You'd be my second Monster. Almost as famous as the first. It would be the great adventure you've yearned for. A war story for both of us to share.

Clay's breathing comes in quick, panicked bursts.

WHALE

You'd be fully exonerated. I've taken care of that. I wrote a note. I'll even leave you the house, the car...

Clay's body starts to tremble.
Clay lets out a howl -- his shoulders heave and shake.

CLAY

I am not your monster.

He climbs off Whale, crawls away, his body collapsing in wracking, anguished sobs. Whale opens his eyes, gazes at Clay.

WHALE

What have I done?

Oh, selfish, selfish fool. I have lost my mind.

He forces himself to his feet.

What was I thinking?

WHALE

You're a softhearted bloke. A bloody pussycat.

WHALE

My deepest apologies. Can you ever forgive me?

Clay doesn't look up.

WHALE

I suppose not.

(a bone-crushing sigh)

Good God, I am tired. I really must go to bed.

WHALE

Whale starts slowly down the hall.
INT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

Whale sits on the edge of the bed, tugs the bowtie from his collar. Clay taps on the door, opens it.

You okay? Clay

Oh Clayton. Whale

Did I hurt you? Clay

Nothing I didn't deserve. Whale

Need some help? Clay

Pray you, undo this button. Whale

He lifts his chin and points to his collar.

I can never manage it when I'm tired. Whale

Clay leans in to open the button. His face is only six inches from Whale's.

Do you believe people come into our lives for a reason? Whale

Clay doesn't answer. Whale turns, breaking their shared gaze.

I can undress myself, thank you. Whale

(steps back) Clay

All right.

Whale hauls his legs up and stretches out on the bed.

When you die... be sure your brain is the last organ to fizzle -- Whale

You'll feel better tomorrow. Clay

(Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow...)
Whale smiles fondly at him.
WHALE

Goodnight, Clayton.

WHALE

Clay pulls the door shut and it clicks. He stands there a moment.

108 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - KITCHEN - NIGHT

Clay shakes open a bedsheets and wraps himself in it.

109 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - NIGHT

Clay finds a pack of cigarettes on the floor and lights one, then sets the furniture back up. He picks up the gas mask from beside the sofa, shoves it into its box.

Clay sits in the wing-back chair, props his feet on the hassock, adjusting the sheet around his shoulders. We CUT TO:

110 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - BEDROOM - NIGHT

WHALE bolts up in bed. An electrical storm flashes and cracks in the window.

WHALE gets out of bed, stares outside. From his POV, the lawn is a barren slope covered with stumps.

WHALE turns on the desk lamp, sits. He pulls out a piece of paper.

111 EXT. BATTLEFIELD - NIGHT

We’re back to the scene that opened the movie, a flat-topped creature stumbling through the mud. A flash of lightning reveals Clay’s face. He turns, signals for Whale to follow him. Whale joins Clay on a slight rise of ground, the rim of a crater. Clay points down into it.

111A EXT. CRATER - NIGHT

The crater is full of bodies gathered around a pool of water. Whale stumbles down, reaches the bottom and bends over the nearest corpse in khaki. It is Leonard Barnett. There are no wounds on his body, no rips or gaping holes. His eyes are closed in dreamless sleep.

WHALE looks up and sees that Clay is gone. The only other living creature is an owl, which blinks wearily at him.

WHALE lies down, finding a spot next to Barnett. He takes a last breath and closes his eyes. We CUT TO:

112 INT. WHALE’S HOUSE - LIVING ROOM - DAY

A roar of bells blasts Clay awake. The telephone is ringing. A hard pair of shoes thunder out to answer it.
Clay blinks at the sight of Hanna in black dress and white apron, chattering on the phone by the far wall.

HANNA
No, no, he did not tell me. But no problem. I will make breakfast.

She scoldingly cuts her eyes at Clay.

HANNA
Ten? Very good, then. Good-bye.

She hangs up and faces Clay with a stern frown.

CLAY
It's not what you think.

HANNA
I have brought you your clothes. All I ask is that you get dressed and go. We are having a guest for breakfast.

CLAY
I need to talk to you about Mr. Whale.

HANNA
There is nothing you can say that will surprise me.

CLAY
Maybe. But I still need to talk. Do I have time for a cup of coffee before I go?

HANNA
I blame my daughter for keeping me out so late. I only hope you did not get him excited. It could give him a new stroke.

She stomps into the kitchen. Clay gets up, slips on his undershorts. He's zipping up his chinos when she comes out again with a breakfast tray. She hands him a cup of coffee.

CLAY
Thanks.

(quickly)
Why do you do it?

HANNA
What do I do?

CLAY
Take care of Mr. Whale like he was your flesh and blood.
HANNA

It is my job. I did it when he was happy and it was easy. It is only fair I do it now when he is ill.
(picks up the tray)
Enough talk. I must wake up the master.

She marches around the corner toward Whale's bedroom. Clay hears her knocking on a door.

HANNA (O.S.)

Mr. Jimmy? Morning, Mr. Jimmy.

Clay pulls on his shirt. Hanna comes back around the corner.

HANNA

What have you done with him?

CLAY

I put him to bed. He's not there?

She goes to the foot of the stairs and shouts:

HANNA

Mr. Jimmy! Mr. Jimmy!

Hanna starts up the stairs.

Look for him!

Clay reaches for his socks when he notices an envelope on the floor next to the chair. He picks it up. On the front is scrawled the word 'CLAYTON'. Clay opens the envelope.
Inside is Whale's original sketch of the Monster's head. He turns it over. There is a message written on the back.

CLAY

No.

Clay drops the sketch, looks out. He sees something.

EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - BACKYARD - DAY

Clay crosses the patio, hurtles down the slope.

EXT. WHALE'S HOUSE - POOL - DAY

Clay leaps headfirst into the water. Whale rests lightly on his back, with an upward sway of straight white hair. Clay hauls the body toward the side.

CLAY

Almost there. Almost there.
If I try to stop, I only end up being wrong.

Why am I so useless? Am I only useful when I'm ill? My mind is the key to the story!

Nevertheless, I want more.

The machine has found a pocket towards the water's edge.

NARROW

Mr. Simms: Matron, notanny.

Now outline on this article. Name comes back around the corner.

NARROW

What have you gone with him?

CARY

I hung him to bed. He was in despair.

She spoke to the face of the actors and actresses

HARROW

Mr. Simms: Mr. Shandy?

Hands excelente on the actors.

HARROW

Look for film

Cary photographers for the man who wore the pocket as a nonsense on the face of the actors, heZEIC to dig on the floor. The face of the actors, heZEIC to dig on the floor. The face of the actors, heZEIC to dig on the floor. The face of the actors, heZEIC to dig on the floor.

CARY

He hands the packet to by.
He gets an arm around Whale's chest and heaves the body over the curb. He climbs out, drags the body forward to rest in the grass. He grabs a wrist. Nothing.

CLAY

Son of a bitch. You crazy son of a bitch.

Clay straddles Whale’s thighs and applies pressure on his rib cage. But it’s no use. Clay sits up and takes a deep breath.

HANNA

Ohhh!

Hanna comes down the path, her run slowing to a walk. She stares at Clay.

CLAY

I didn’t do it. This wasn’t me.

HANNA

Oh, Mr. Jimmy.

CLAY

He wanted me to kill him, but I didn’t. He did it himself.

HANNA

He says here good-bye. I find it in his room. He is sorry, he says. He has had a wonderful life.

She waves a folded piece of paper.

HANNA

You poor, foolish man. You couldn’t wait for God to take you in his time?

Clay slowly stands up. Hanna looks around in panic.

HANNA

You must leave. You were not here this morning.

CLAY

But I didn’t do this!

HANNA

The police will not know that. They will want to investigate.

CLAY

We have his note.
HANNA
Do you want to be questioned about you and Mr. Jimmy? Please, Clayton. It will be better if I find the body alone.

CLAY
But how're you going to explain this? (points at the body) How did you get him out of the pool?

HANNA
You are right. Yes. We must put him back.

They both hesitate, looking down at Whale. Then Clay drags the body parallel with the pool. Hanna stoops over to adjust the collar of Whale's shirt.

HANNA
Poor Mr. Jimmy. We do not mean disrespect. You will keep better in water.

She nods to Clay. He rolls the body over and it splashes on its belly. It bounces a moment in the waves of the splash, then begins to sink. As it drops, the air in the chest slowly flips the body around.

Looking up at them with open eyes, Whale sinks backward into the thickening light. His arms trail upward and the hands lightly flutter as if waving good-bye. The melancholy sound of a solo violin pierces the silence as we CUT TO:

114 EXT./INT. BLIND MAN'S HUT - NIGHT

A black-and-white scene from "Bride of Frankenstein." The old BLIND MAN plays a mournful lullaby on his violin while the MONSTER listens outside, moved by the music. He smashes open the door of the hut in an effort to get closer to the soul-soothing sound. The blind man stops playing, looks up.

BLIND MAN
Who is it? You're welcome, my friend, whoever you are.

The Monster attempts to communicate, manages only a plaintive moan. The blind man stands.

BLIND MAN
I cannot see you. I cannot see anything. You must please excuse me. But I am blind.

The Monster holds out his burned hands.
BLIND MAN
Come in, my poor friend. No one will hurt you here. If you're in trouble, perhaps I can help you.

The old man touches the Monster, who recoils with a defensive growl.

BLIND MAN
Can you not speak? It's strange.
Perhaps you're afflicted too. I cannot see and you cannot speak.

INT. SUBURBAN HOUSE - NIGHT (1972)

MICHAEL BOONE, 10, lies on the living room carpet, staring raptly at the movie playing on the large Zenith console.
The house is small but tidy and comfortable.

BLIND MAN (O.S.)
It's been a long time since any human being came into this hut. I shall look after you. And you will comfort me.

On the tv screen, the old man starts to cry, then collapses onto the Monster's chest. A thick tear rolls down the Monster's cheek.

Clay Boone sits on the sofa, a baby on his lap. He's 40 now, his hair starting to thin but still closely cropped at the top and sides.

On the tv, daylight fills the hut. The blind man and the Monster share a meal.

BLIND MAN
We are friends, you and I.
Friends.

Friends.

MONSTER

BLIND MAN
Before you came, I was all alone.
It is bad to be alone.

MONSTER

Alone, bad. Friend, good.

He takes the old man's hand.

Friend, good.

MONSTER

The blind man nods. On the sofa, Clay watches his son watch the movie.
BRIDGemen
Come in! My poor teacher. No one will hurt your house. If you're in trouble, perhaps I can help you.

The city may compensate the Mountain, who receives with a

115 INT. LIVING ROOM - NIGHT (LATER)

A color promo for "Chiller Theater" fills the screen. Clay turns off the set.

CLAY
Time for bed, sport.

Michael groans, slowly stands.

CLAY
What'd you think of the movie?

MICHAEL
Pretty cool. Better than most monster movies.

CLAY
I knew the guy who made it.

Michael glances skeptically at his father.

MICHAEL
Come on, Dad. Is this another one of your stories?

Here.

Clay unfolds Whale's sketch of the Monster, hands it to his son.

CLAY
It's his original sketch of the Monster.

Michael turns over the sketch. On the back, scrawled in block letters: "TO CLAYTON BOONE -- FRIEND?"

MICHAEL
This is for real?

Clay nods. At the same time, his wife DANA appears in the doorway. A pretty, cheerful woman in her mid-30s.

DANA
The trash, Clay. Before it rains.

CLAY
Okay.

Clay kisses the top of his son's head.

CLAY
Off to bed.
CLAY

Time for bed, boys.

CLAY

We'd you drink of the water.

CLAY

What is the meaning of the water?

CLAY

I know the girl who made it.

CLAY

A sense of our, is it the meaning of the water?

CLAY

It's an expression of the meaning of the water.

CLAY

The time of the water of the water.

CLAY

The water of the water of the water.

CLAY

We're back on track. It's like another one.

CLAY

Here.

CLAY

I see the original express of the water.

CLAY

In the original express of the water.

CLAY

What is the meaning of the water?

CLAY

A feeling of the meaning of the water.

CLAY

The time of the water of the water.

CLAY

We're back on track.
Clay carries a large metal bin down the tidy lawn. The sky momentarily brightens with a silent flash of lightning.

Clay gazes up at the electrical storm. He glances back at his house, sees Dana cradling the baby in an upstairs window.

The skies open with a shattering crash of thunder. Clay tilts up his face, drinks in the cool rain. Then he extends his arms and staggers along the sidewalk, imitating the Monster's famous lurch.

We PULL BACK, revealing a sleepy neighborhood of small houses and neat lawns, until Clay is only a small dot in the landscape.

FADE OUT.
